cultry that the infantry could force a pathway to the open space beyond.

Here again on either side was a veritable wreck of dismounted guns, broken wheels, limber chests, horses mangled and men crushed out of all semblance to humanity.

The morning was bright and beautiful, with a fresh breeze from the river blowing, but its downy wings were laden with the odors of a slaughter house, seized upon in passing over the fatal plain below.

I have seen many battlefields, but never one so horrible and repulsive to the sight as this same one of Malvern Hill. I never had a nightmare for months afterward when all its features were not recalled, and the semblance in the dreams could not intensify the horror of the waking reality.

From the thickets to the foot of the heights where McClellan's batteries were planted it is no exaggeration to say that for a mile and a half one might have walked on dead men without putting foot to earth.

And such dead men! Heads cut off, limbs lopped, bowels torn out, legs torn from the trunks, trunks crushed into an undistinguishable mass—a heaped-up mass of pounded flesh, that had been strong, breathing men twelve hours before.

Oh! it was horrible! and this especially where the huge shells of the gunboats had exploded among the assaulting ranks. We crossed the plain, avoiding stepping on the dead as well as we could, and came to the road where Jackson had fought.

Save that the dead were not lying so thickly as on the plain the same feature was observable, the skill with which the federal batteries had been massed, for nearly all were the victims of cannon shot or shell.

The federal infantry bore, comparatively speaking, but a small share in this battle, while the confederate infantry, owing to the lay of the land, were very imperfectly supported by their artillery.

As I said, above, the pursuit was not pursued at all, properly speaking, and the confederate army encamped a few miles beyond the fields, leaving Gen. McClellan to pursue his way unmolested to his shelter at Harrison's landing.

One thing I want to say, is that all the confederate wounded captured in this campaign, and who were recaptured in the pursuit, gave warm testimony to the humanity and kindness with which they were treated by the Yankee surgeons, and many a man is living at this day who would not be dead if it had not been for that kindness.

Thus ended the first battle, which showed the wonderful pluck and endurance of the army of the Potomac after repeated disaster—qualities which were maintained to the end of the struggle.

The Small Boy in Georgia. Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.—During the interval between the letting out and the taking in of school the small boy has been endeavouring to kill time with the varied amusements incidental to the life of the youth.

The school-house had not fairly closed their doors before the boys were batting and balling at the park and over the back streets. One could not leave the maddening crowd on the busy thoroughfares and step into the residence portion of the city without running afoul of a game of that national nuisance—baseball.

A Tear Docks a Rose. A steady stream of business and sporting men passed through the parlor on the second floor of No. 11 West Twenty-fifth street yesterday morning.

The men gazed sorrowfully at the remains of Charles B. Ransom, the dead sporting man. The mild features looked as natural as when in his palmy days he raked in the thousands of dollars to the click of the ivory chips.

On either side of the bier staid business men and flashy gamblers faced each other. Conversation was carried on in subdued tones, but many kinds words were spoken of the dead. A man of perhaps 30 years was among the first of the callers of the day.

He was unknown to the attendants, but was visibly affected by the sad scene before him. No one ever remembered having seen him before. As he turned to leave he plucked a pure white rose from his coat and laid it upon the casket.

Upon the flower something glistened in the sombre light. It was a tear-drop.

A Bell-Punch and Toothache. I was on a Lehigh Valley train bound south the other day. Approaching the seat occupied by a lady, the conductor pleasantly extended his right hand, with the punch handily adjusted to his fingers.

Thereupon the lady quietly pushed farther into her seat, and with a very quizzical expression on her countenance, remarked in a tone of surprise: "Ah! but my dear sir, I do not want my tooth extracted."

I have found Athlyphoros to be a sovereign remedy—nothing like it—for relieving neuralgia or pain of any kind. I have recommended it even to strangers who I knew suffered with neuralgic pains.

What things women are? exclaimed Brown. "My wife and another woman sat a whole-half-hour talking about how to narrow off a stocking, and from the interest they took in the discussion, one would think that the salvation of the human race depended on it."

"I've heard a couple of women discuss for half a day over the best way to pin a tidy on a chair back." Then Brown and White spent the rest of the evening in a very intellectual conversation over the respective merits of curve and straight pitching as applied to the national game.

Each eventually got as mad as a March hare and have not spoken to each other since. There can be no doubt that women as conversationalists are far behind men in choice of subjects.—(Boston Transcript.)

Why He Got Weary. "Bagatock, I pity you—I do, indeed." "Pity me, sir?" "I do. You live such a useless existence. You are languid and weary, and have no occupation in life."

You are mistaken, Mr. Budge. My business is with my fellow-man. I go about doing good." "Ah! That accounts for your getting tired so easily."
