The Pittless Cyclone.

Whence it cometh or whither it goeth no man can tell. It lurks in no particular latitude or longitude; it is partial to no section or season; it regards neither station nor condition; it respects neither morals nor manners; it swoops without warning. and its path is marked by desolation and death. No man is strong enough or swift enough to escape its fury; no mother may supplicate its mercy; no babe so innocent or belpless that it can command from heaven or earth protection from its relentless and indiscriminate wrath. Temples of worship, places of vice, haunts of misery; and asylums for the sick are arising from had blood. That remarkable leveled alike: and among the dead the strongest and the weak, the old and the young, the sinful and sainted lie side by side. All the signs by which human mind is capable of judging-all the indications of the doom-swept waste-point to the potency of God, but to the temper of flend. The pitiless cyclone! Whence cometh it? Whither goeth it? Hath it a purpose as the expression of Almighty Power? Who can interpret it? Who can make it seem consistent with the idea of omniscience and love? Who can reconcile mankind to its visitations? Who can fortell its approach? Who can provide safe refuge from its ravages? Who?-[St. Louis Sayings.

A gentleman who had carefully trained up a servant in the way he should go, so that when his wife was present he might not depart from it, sent him with a box ticket for the theater to the house of a young lady. The servant returned when the gentleman and wife were at dinner. He had, of course, been told in giving answers in certain cases to substitute the masculine for the feminine pronoun. 'Did your see him?" asked the master. "Yes sir," replied the servant. "He said that he'd go with pleasure, and that he'd wait for you, "What was he doing?" asked the wife carelessly. "Putting on his bonnet, ma'am," said the idiot.

Circumstances Alter Cases.

A little girl who lives in the Highlands went up to Vermont one summer a few years ago. Contrary to their expectations when they left home, her father and mother took and occupied a small and very scantily furnished farm house during the summer. One day the 5-year-old child was rebuked for some misdemeanor, whereupon she put on her most philosophical manner and astonished her elders by remarking: "Well. mamma, I don't know how anybody can live religion in such a horrid old house!" Circumstances do have something to do with the case, after all.—Boston Gazette.

Men All Alike.

"It is very seldom," said the waitress, "that you meet one man different from the rest. They are all tuned to the same key. and that key is conceit. There isn't a man who comes in here regularly but believes that all us girls are 'dead gone' on him. Doesn't matter how old, how poor, or how homely the man is, he still thinks that wherever he goes he leaves behind him broken-hearted women. I 'spose you think men come here just to eat. Well, they do, but anybody to look at them would think that their chief purpose was to whisper chitchat to the waitress and look killingly every time she passes. And they are all alike, married or single. If they only knew how tired it makes us, perhaps they would quit. I tell you it is refreshing when, once in a long time, a man comes in who really appears to have come in for the purpose of having a meal-who piles into the grub and seems not to mind us any more than if we were men. When that sort of a man strikes the place and leaves it without any of the little flirty tricks of the general run we girls just do admire him, and wouldn't mind if he was a little more sociable."-[Toronto Mail.

A True Philanthropist.

In an editorial on the late John Welsh, the Philadelphia Ledger tells the following anecdotes of him: "On the eve of one of his tours of Europe and the Holy Land he made a visit to the Episcopal hospital, and, casually looking over the books, noted to himself the amount of the hospital's unliquidated debt. It was about $18,000, and two days afterward, when he was on the sea, the hospital received his check for the full amount. He was then out of reach of praise for his thoughtful care of the institution. Altogether he contributed there $41,000."

After Them. Burdette reports the following entry in 'the captain's log-book": "August 16. 1925-About 3:15 this afternoon, after three years of incredible toil, hardships and labor, we reached that spot which has filled the ice fields of the north with graves and wrecks. We stood at last at the North Pole. Of the 100 men who sailed from New York harbor I was the only one living, and my only companions were the two Esquimaux. A moment we stood in solemn silence, the savage and Christian slike awed by the thought that we had crowned with success the superhuman efforts of centuries, when, stepping briskly around from the other side of the pole, a woman came, holding out her autograph album, while a few paces behind her walked a men from the Redpath Lyceum Bureau, who wanted to know what I would take to lecture through New England and the Middle states."

HE TRIED THE WRONG MAN.

Two Confidence Men Meet and Enjoy a Ride in a Railroad Train.

A tall, red-haired young man with an innocent face and a black necktie sat alone in a car seat on one of the swift flying trains of the Pennsylvania Railroad bound for Washington. He had just begun to read a copy of the Christian Advocate when a benevolent-looking middle-aged man entered and sat down beside him. For an hour the young man read his paper, and the old man watched the telegraph poles go by, Becoming tired of this amusement the stranger fished a half dozen little pill boxes out of a deep pocket in his overcoat and placed them in his lap. The young man put away his paper and eyed his neighbor, who pulling out a roll of bills from his vest pocket, selected a note and placed it in one of the pill-

"Do you suppose you could select the box containing the bill?" he asked of the young man with a smile, and a look that seemed to say, 'Let us be

The stranger himself picked out the box, took out the bill and put a $10 note in its place. This time, however, a corner of the bill was left sticking out after the cover had been put on the

"Now do you think you could pick it out?" he said, showing his teeth. "Of course I could," replied the young

"Well, if you will give me a dollar, I let you try."

"Oh, no, I wouldn't do that. You're not sharp at all. You've left a corner of that bill sticking out of the box so any fool could pick it out."

"Why, of course," said the sharper, apparently confused by the discovery. "How could I make such a blunder?" Thereupon he took out the $10 bill and put in its place a bright, new $20 note. The corner of the bill stuck out as before, but the man pretended not to notice it.

"Now will you try it?" he continued, after wiping his forehead with a red handkerchief. 'Give me a dollar and take your pick.' "You've got a d'ance to make $19 in clean money.

The young man's face did not show the least animation at this declaration. If there was the beginning of a smile hidden under his moustache it did not reveal itself when he answered:

"You are a stranger to me. I don't want to take $19 out of you; it wouldn't be gentlemanly in me to do so. If we were old friends the case would be different. But I see plainly you are not used to the wicked ways of this world. You are not sharp. You have left the corner of that $20 note sticking out of the cover just as you did the other. You ought to go and work on a farm awhile, you ought."

The perspiration poured from the sharper's forehead. He had caught a Tartar, and had had a hard time of it too. The red-headed young man took the boxes out of his neighbor's hand, and, after returning the $20 note, said : "Perhaps you would like to try your hand at picking out the lucky box? I'll put this $50 bill in this one and a $10 note in this box. Give me $5 and you shall try your luck."

The man reluctantly paid over the money, and after the young man had shaken up the boxes in his hat, took up one from which the green corner of a note appeared. When he had pulled off the cover he found it contained only a piece of a revenue stamp. His face fell at the discovery.

"Try it again," said his tormentor.

He tried it again, but with no better "Take the lot," laughed the young man, pouring them into his neighbors' lap. The swindler opened every box, but not a sign of a bill appeared.

"Here are the bills safe in my pocket," said the bright young fellow, producing the notes from his vest pocket and shaking them in his neighbor's face. "The next time you want to try your game on a stranger, don't pick out a man who is in the same business as yourself. Ta!ta!"

From the London Truth.

Among the wedding presents sent to the Rev. Stephen Gladstone I notice a couple of checks for £100, given by the Duke of Westminster and Sir Andrew Clark, respectively. I cannot help thinking that the example of the duke and Sir Andrew ought to be widely followed, especially when the bride and bridegroom are not too well endowed with this world's goods. When a comparatively poor man marries he is generally overwhelmed with all sorts of elaborate and useless articles but very few people have the common sense to contribute in each instead of in kind. Surely even a five-pound note is an indefinitely more serviceable present than a piece of plate which requires constant cleaning, or a china vase which is certain to be smashed by a careless house-

The Sunflower in the Arctic Circle.

From the Interview with Lieutenant Greely. "In the most tropical part of the Arctic circle," said the Lieutenant, "grows a creeping willow. When it is very large and luxuriant it is two feet long and the stem is as big round as my thumb. Oscar Wilde would find his dear and estiletic blossom, the sunflower, there, but in a snubbed condition. only a few inches high and shorn of much of its glory, the raying disk dwin-dled and the number of petals diminished, until he would hardly recognize it. The dandelion and the buttercup are also to be found." Above all other earthly ills,
