The Field or Waterloo.

On an eminence looking down on the duel of nations, astride his war horse, surrounded by his stall, sits. Wellington, field marshal of England. In his hand a glass, with which he scans the distant horizon. Now and again he looks along the carnage wrecked plain, but again turns to the far distance. Hark! a bugie! then a peal; then ringing over all the field the notes of the "Advance," quickening to the charge. Then, with a shout that fills the air, with clash of sabre and thunder of horses' hoof, comes sweeping the imperial legion. Napolcon's invincibles, held in reserve by that marvelous genius till this hour. See how all melts before there onslaught. The allied forces are hurled backed as from a resistless storm of rushing death. The engles again sweep the field. All seems lost. Still the Iron Duke sits there and sweeps the distance. Couriers come dashing with dispatches; only a word for answer-wait! Then the glass sweeps the horizon again and then Wellington throws his hat after it, leaps from his horse and begins to write dispatches. What is it? Why that cloud yonder, puffing now with fire and smoke; that dark mass, defiling into the plain at double quick, is the Prusslan reserve. Blucher has kept his promise. Waterloo is decided, and Napoleon's eagles go down

Mixture of Races.

In lecturing before the Science of Life Club, recently, Mr. Leander Thompson spoke of the beneficial results likely to occur in this country from the mixture of races. He said that he was a great lover of coffee, and that he had found that he man gave them a kindly bow and could produce the finest flavor in making up this beverage by combining a little of each of a great variety of the coffee berries grown in different countries. He said further that some of the bakers had discovered that they could make very much better bread by mixing different brands of flour. He then went on to say that every country on this planet was contributing to the population of America, and that all we needed was to give due attention to the laws governing Heredity, prenatal influences, etc., to produce the most perfect specimens of mankind on the face of the globe .- [From Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

The brigands forded the river with difficulty, and in doing so one or two of them lost their guns. By this time all the retainers on the estate were in full cry, following the brigands towards the Saracen's rock. The Hon. Victor Hood, who is about 22 years of age, was on horseback, and with to get ahead of the band. After a ride of forty minutes he came up with three of the brigands, summoned them to surrender by presenting his revolver, and two of his party overtaking him opportunely at this moment, the robbers immediately gave themselves up. These three men were dispatched by Mr. Victor Hood, under escort, to the Castle of Maniaci suit and came up with the fourth brigand close to Scorzone, after, as he himself narrated, a very trying time over heavy clay lands and up and down dangerous precipices. brigand strenuously asserted his innocence, and, in fact, had no arms about He resisted being bound, but on him. Mr. Hood threatening to shoot him he became calmer. This prisoner was sent on to Maniaci, and the party continued their pursuit, but the delay had given the fifth brigand at least a mile start, and traveling on horseback was more difficult than on foot. The malefactors made good his escape into the woods, which cover many thousand acres round the estate. Leaving half a dozen men to continue the search, Mr. Victor Hood returned
