Services of Henry Smith.

There are always several letters awaiting Speaker Carlisle's eye, which show how completely some people are willing to make use of the public servants of the country. These letters are communications requesting the speaker to decide some parliamentary point which is troubling some organization. Occasionally a debating club gets all torn up over something in Cushing's Manual and agree to refer the settlement of the whole dispute to the speaker of the house of representatives. Mr. Carlisle usually hands all such letters to Mr. Henry H. Smith, the journal clerk and author of the book of 500 pages containing the manual and digest, and rules and practices of the house. Mr. Smith is what the boys call a "parliamentary shark." He sits in front of the speaker's desk and follows the course of the legislation more closely than any member upon the floor. When the house is in a tangle, and a dozen men are upon their teet making this or that parliamentary inquiry, Harry Smith is the coolest man there. Not only does he know the proper rulings, but his fingers fly over the leaves of the reference books, and in half a minute the speaker has before him all the precedents by which he can justify his position. - [New York Telegram.

She Got Acquainted.

"Hold on to the young man in front," said a young lady's escort, as they seated themselves on the toboggan. "But I don't know him." "Well, take hold of him and get acquainted." "Sir!" said the Puritanical miss, with an offended look. Her escort chuckled and dropped the conversation. The toboggan started. "Ob, my I" squealed the nervous young lady, taking a very light hold of the blouse of the young man in front. The escort chuckled a little more and the toboggan flew faster. As the sled struck the level the young lady bobbed into the air. She threw her arms around the neck of the young man in front and clung to him like a well licked postage stamp to a letter. When the toboggan came to a standstill the young lady was still tightly clasping the stranger. "Well, did you get acquainted?" inquired the escort, with a grin. "You horrid thing!" was her only answer.

Wine Deteriorates.

One by one the ancient myths depart. The old notion that wine improves by age it seems is a humbug. One Winkleman, a German chemist, has been experimenting on the subject, and says there is an age at which all wines, including the very best, cense to be wholesome. He ordered some of the famous Bremen Rathskeller, Rudesheimer Rose, 1652, and Hocheimer Apostel 1726, highly recommended for the medicinal value, and found that they were de ficient in natural glycerine and contained as much acid as the cheapest new wines in poor seasons, so that they were positively niurious to health.

That Tired Feeling

Is so general at this season that every one knows what is meant by the expression. A change of sea son, climate, or of life, has such a depressing effect upon the body that one feels all tired out, almost completely prostrated, the appetite is lost, and there is no ambition to do anything. The whole tendency of the system is downward. In this condition Hood's Sarsuparilla is just the medicine needed. If purifies the blood, sharpens the appetite, overcomes the

The Veracious Senator Camden's Voracious Alligator.

Washington Letter to Baltimore Herald. Senator Camden, of West Virginia, has just returned from a brief sojourn lief from Senatorial overwork. He is chock-full of stories about the adventures be had in the land of orange blossoms. "One day," said he, "I went out hunting alone. Of course I'm not the man to brag about my skill as a hunter, but, between you and me, I'm no slouch with a gun. After killing a few deer, one or two bears, thirty or forty squirrels, and a dozen or so wild turkeys, I concluded to return to the hotel. It was still early, but I was tired packing round my load of game. I was going along the bank of a creek, and coming across a friendly log I thought I would sit down and rest. I laid my rifle and game down by the log and took a seat. I had a lunch of cold chicken in my haversack. I had breakfasted at daylight, and was pretty hungry. So I took out the chicken and began to eat. When I had finished my repast I took the pocket-knife I had been using to cut the chicken and drove the blade . into the log, intending to let it rest there until I could get out my pockethandkerchief and wipe my hands. But, great scot! You ought to have seen that log! It was the most sensitive log I ever saw. When I drove my knife into it, quicker than lightning, it humped itself like a bucking mule and gave me a flap with its little end that sent me sprawling about thirty feet away. Blame my buttons if that log wasn't a Florida alligator twenty-eigth feet long, with a tail like a cross-cut saw and teeth as sharp and long as tusks of a boar.

"When I scrambled to my feet and looked at the log-I mean the alligator-there it was, standing rampant on its feet, with eyes glaring and its teeth grinding savagely together. I dared not run, for I was told never to run from an alligator, as he would be sure to pursue and overtake me. So I stood transfixed to the spot. What did the alligator do? Keeping his gaze fixed steadily upon me, he deliberately backed to where my pile of game lay and pitched in. First he ate up the bears, then the deer. Smacking his chops like a regulation boardinghouse hash-eater, he then turned on the squirrels and wild turkeys, and when he got chrough there wasn't a hair or feather to be seen. I'll undertake to say that no alligator ever before had such a rare banquet. How the alligator held all that feed I don't understand, but he did. When he got through there wasn't a thing left but my rifle, and he noseved around that for several seconds as if he intended to eat it too, but he didn't. What did he do then? Well, sir, that alligator deliberately turned his tail to the bank, and keeping his eye on me, backed to the edge. Then, with a snort and a bellow, he plunged, tail foremost, into the water. I got to my rifle in the fraction of a second. rushed to the edge and looked down. him, but he was too sharp to come to knife of mine sticking in his back yet, for I drove it in pretty deep. You see the alligator was sound asleep when I was sitting on him, but sticking the

A distinguished Boston divine preached a few Sundays ago for a cousin who is pastor for a church forty miles out in the country. His relative was somewhat flurried by the presence of the city minister, and in the opening prayer, with which he prefaced the other's sermon, he prayed: "Help thy servant who is to speak
