

TO ROBERT BURTON.

A quaint old sort of learning lies In Burton's pleasant pages...

Cape Matifon: "you are going too far, and the idea of..."

"It is possible that he has seen me at Ragusa," replied the Doctor...

Antekirtta batteries were doubtful. They were probably without artillery.

CHAPTER XXIV—CONTINUED.

Suddenly a shout came from the mainmast above, from one of the men on guard.

Would Sava allow herself to be retaken? No! To be retaken by Sarcany was to be lost!

With a prayer to God the brave girl ran to the parapet, and without hesitation leaped from the terrace.

Pescade had not even time to interfere; but throwing off the mat that held him, he caught hold of the rope and in a second was at the foot of the wall.

"Sava! Sava!" he shouted. "Here is the young lady!" said a familiar voice, "and no bones broken! I was just in the way."

A shout of fury, followed by a heavy thud, cut short Cape Matifon's speech. Namir in a movement of rage, unwilling to abandon the prey that was escaping her, would have been smashed to pieces if two strong hands had not caught her as she fell.

Doctor Antekirtt, Pierre and Luigi, had rejoined Cape Matifon and Point Pescade who were running towards the shore.

A few minutes afterwards Sarcany, with a score of armed men, came out in pursuit of the fugitives.

When he reached the creek where the Electric had been waiting, the Doctor and his companions were already on board, and in a few turns of the screw the swift vessel was out of range.

Sava, alone with the Doctor and Pierre, soon regained her consciousness. She learned that she was the daughter of Count Mathias Sandorf!

CHAPTER XXV.

ANTEKIRTTA.

Fifteen hours after leaving the coast of Tripoli, the Electric was signaled by the look-out at Antekirtta, and in the afternoon she came into harbor.

We can easily imagine the reception given to the Doctor and his companions. Now that Sava was out of danger it was decided to still keep secret her relationship to Doctor Antekirtt.

Count Mathias wished to remain unknown until the accomplishment of his work. But it was enough that Pierre, whom he had made his son, was the betrothed of Sava Sandorf, for signs of rejoicing to be shown on all sides, in the Stadthaus as well as in the town of Arsenak.

We may judge what were Madame Bathory's feelings when Sava was given back to her after so many trials. And Sava herself soon recovered her health—a few days of happiness were sufficient for her complete re-establishment.

That Point Pescade had risked his life there could be no doubt. But as he seemed to think it quite a natural thing to do, there was no possibility of rewarding him—except in a few simple words.

Pierre Bathory had elapsed him to his breast, and the Doctor had given him a look of gratitude that he could hear of no other recompense. According to his custom he gave the whole credit of the adventure to Cape Matifon.

"He is the man that should be thanked," he said; "if old Cape had not been so clever with that pole I should never have been able to jump into Sidi Hazam's house, and Sava Sandorf would have been killed by her fall if Cape Matifon had not been below to receive her in his arms!"

"Look here! Look here!" answered
