

DISHONEST PENSION AGENTS.

Some of the Tricks by Which They Manage to Make a Good Deal of Money.

The dishonest pension agent gathers very little moss in the pension department when the special examiner attends to his business," said Maj. A. R. Banks of the national pension agency yesterday.

"Dishonesty thrives as well there as elsewhere, does it not?" asked a reporter.

"Hardly," was the reply. The examiners have their system of examination reduced to a point that would astonish anyone not acquainted with the business. Why, as soon as the claim is filed, though its justice is as apparent as sunlight, the whole matter is turned over to an examiner who inspects it as though the claimant was leagued with Beelzebub himself in a scheme to defraud the national treasury. When the examiner has thus dismissed the claim he makes his report upon it, and it then is any point that is the least doubtful, any matter capable of any but absolutely certain construction, the claim is ruthlessly sent again upon its wanderings through the army examiners, who are specialists and supervising. When they run the gauntlet again, unless everything is perfectly square, the whole business is summarily dropped. Dishonesty on the part of the agent impedes the claim at every step. Of course the agents realize this, and so, for the most part, turn their attention exclusively to the claimant when practicing simony. Only a certain fee, fixed by unalterable law, is allowed the agent, and this fee is often ridiculously small, considering the amount of labor expended upon the claim. To take more than this fee is a statutory crime and punishment is swift and severe upon the discovery of such an offense. In order to avoid the provisions of the statute, however, unscrupulous agents and attorneys resort to all sorts of schemes and subterfuges. One will be content with a present for his wife, either in the way of money or money's worth; another will sell the claimant a worthless horse for a fabulous price; a third will accept a present for himself; while others will perform some trading service for which the claimant pays them whatever they may ask. Of course all these schemes of extortion are morally doing indirectly what the law says shall not be done directly, and consequently are punished just as though they were done directly. This is only one of the tricks—although it is the commonest—but perjury, false affidavits, and forgeries are part of the stock in trade of the dishonest pension attorney. The interior department tries to protect itself by requiring all attorneys to have a certificate of good standing, but, unfortunately, you can't tell a dishonest lawyer by the color of his eyes. Ten years service has taught me something of their tricks and ways.

"But are not the claimants sometimes dishonest?"

"Frequently, and even the attorneys don't detect their dishonesty sometimes."

"What form is most common in their dishonesty?"

"That of showing hurts, wounds, sores, and injuries, and claiming they were received during the war, when in reality they were traceable to buzz-saws, railway accidents, kerens, and horse-stealing expeditions. I know of one case in which a man claimed a pension on account of blindness caused by a gunshot wound in the face, when upon examination it was ascertained that he was shot and left for dead when trying to desert his wife, before the war. His wife belonged to a very well-known family. An alleged widow once bothered me for a long time about a claim for pension on account of her husband having been killed in the service. She, of course, stated that she had not married again. One day a man came in and, saying that Mrs. — was sick, inquired about her claim. I answered him as fully as I cared to, and not having very much to do just then, engaged him in conversation. During the course of the conversation I happened to ask him if he was the attorney of Mrs. —. "No, he answered, 'I'm her husband.' And he was. On we went for some queer quack fish." — St. Louis Republic.

Two Theories for Cooking Meat.

A Frenchman will take a roast of beef, or in fact any solid meat, and subject it to a long though gradual action of heat, so that all the fibrous parts would be thoroughly cooked. That would leave but little work for the digestive organs to perform. An English cook, on the other hand, would build a roaring fire and would roast the beef only on the outside, leaving the inside rare. He allows only a little time for boiling or roasting, because his theory is that any other process destroys the genuine flavor of the meat.

The point of flavor is the one on which the two cooks split, and therefore their philosophies run wide apart. "No flavor can be invented," says the Englishman, "which can approach that of meat. The flavor of meat must not be meddled with. Whether the dish is of beef, or lamb, or mutton, that process is the best which can keep the flavor of each meat distinguishable above any sauce or condiment that may accompany it." Nothing, in the Englishman's notion, can equal the flavor of the juve oozing from a nicely roasted joint or rib when sliced. The Frenchman can make an endless variety of flavor from the same meat, in either of which will that of the original meat be recognized. That idea, merged upon, makes the difference between the two methods of cooking. — The Argonaut.

Good Advice.

"When are you going to pay me that money?"

"As soon as I am able."

"Well you pay up pretty soon or I'll bring suit."

"That's all right, but let me give you a pointer. I owe you fifty dollars, send me the fifty and bring suit for an even hundred." — Texas Siftings.

Statistical.

The statistician is an authority whom none dare dispute. With the digestive powers of an ostrich, and the absorbent quality of a sponge, he sucks facts and figures down his esophagus as easily as a juggler swallows swords. He reduces the world to the size of a pot-cheese, and holds it in a pair of calipers. Every inch of its territory is as familiar to him as the patches on an old coat. His generalizations are as broad as the spirit of Catholicity, and his assertions are as sweeping as the power of faith.

Prof. Johann von Ziffer has prepared a table of statistics lately of unique interest. With no intent to deceive he puts the population of the United States at 60,000,000 souls. Out of this number were told 4,000 commit suicide every year. One shudders to think of the awful fate that would befall the metropolis, were there no increase in population, for at the above death-rate, New York would be depopulated in 17,777 years.

The next item shows the enormous consumption of beer. If the beer drunk by the average German were stored in barrels, at the end of twenty years there would equal in bulk the Cheops pyramid. Then if the hoops should burst, and the beer escape, it could easily float a large, or flood a town.

Following we have the statistics of nations. Every man of temperate habit (he winks 3,458,629 times a year, Prof. Von Ziffer estimates that politicians wink a round million in excess of this number, and an alarming increase is noted on the part of half-paid men who begin to wink in time at the comic opera. No less interesting, perhaps, are the figures which follow, giving the exact number of wood-sawed men in Hong Kong. We also read with absorbing interest that the rat crop in Norway has increased 13 per cent, since 1880, and that 388,811 tracts are distributed among the Zulus every month. Other figures are given which excite reflection. We may briefly note the number of feathers on a hen (6,344), the amount of sunlight diffused in interstellar space, the population of the globe at the time of the flood (estimated), and the number of pills swallowed annually in hospitals.

Prof. Von Ziffer's table is of inestimable value to science. It is the result of years of patient labor, and his industry is warmly commended by those who appreciate the difficulty and magnitude of his task. — Harold Van Sandvoort, in Life.

Cutting Out Part of a Brain.

An annual surgical operation was performed at the New York hospital recently by Dr. Robert F. Weir, who excised a portion of a woman's brain. The patient was about 35 years old. From the symptoms, the surgeons, Dr. Amidon being called in, concluded that a tumor of some kind existed in the brain. The patient was etherized; Dr. Weir made an incision in the scalp on the right side of the head and removed a piece of bone from the skull about as large as the larger end of a hen's egg. Dr. Amidon had located the tumor at this point. Upon the removal of the bone the subjacent part of the brain immediately protruded through the opening in the skull, indicating a high degree of intercranial pressure. Upon examination of the exposed part of the brain no tumor could be found. The cortex of the protruding brain, however, appeared to be darker colored than in normal brain tissue.

Failing to discover any tumor, the surgeons were unable to replace the portion of the brain which protruded through the hole in the skull. Dr. Weir then cut off the protruding part. The hemorrhage from the knife wound was short and was stopped partly by ligatures applied to the larger blood vessels, and by the use of the thermocautery on the fresh surface. The skin flaps of the scalp were then brought back into place and sutured and the wound was dressed with the usual antiseptic precautions. After the operation the patient was much improved and expressed herself as feeling great relief. The symptoms of drowsiness and dizziness, as well as the partial paralysis of the right side, having disappeared entirely. A microscopic examination of the matter removed from the patient's head shows it to be brain matter infiltrated with a new growth. Nearly an ounce of matter was removed from the brain. — New York Tribune.

Woman Does Well in Medicine.

The Philadelphia Times says there are eight women physicians in that city whose annual practice averages $20,000 each, twelve whose income averages above $10,000, and twenty-two who average $5,000 each. And yet women who have sought to enter the medical profession in Philadelphia have met with more opposition there than from any other city in the country. The opposition is not from the male physicians. They can read that women never acquire skill enough to deal with a fever or a fracture. Besides, they feared to have their field invaded by women. Possibly they had a latent fear that women might make a success of the profession. This has proved to be the case. There are now 2,500 women with first-class diplomas from medical colleges, and their success in this field is acknowledged on all hands. There are women M. D.'s who are consulted by the most eminent physicians in Philadelphia and New York.

Tom Anjerry's Creator.

When young Tom Anjerry, of the Austin University, entered the medical class, he excited the wrath of the Professor by his dullness. One day when he was more than usually stupid the Professor finally broke out with:

"Young man, can you tell me the meaning of the verb to create?"

"To create?" stammered Tom.

"Why, certainly. To create is to make something out of nothing."

"So it is," replied the Professor, "therefore we create you doctor." — Texas Siftings.

National Honor.

John Ingalls has a characteristically national honor in his last work, Shakespeare's, all wit and humor written in English we remember that of the Scotchman's finest and laugh at it least. He has used almost perfect and the best shades of colloquial. It is the least recorded for it belongs in general to the nature of repeated and needs for setting the occasion that allied it forth. The American is the most various, and he is unexpected. He asks the victim into his confidence, and with a wave and he gets the better of him over and over again. He is good at contrast, but his forte is in the impossible.

The Chinese Legation at Washington.

The Chinese legation at Washington, Stewart Castle on Dupont Circle is one of the finest houses in Washington. It is a great white palace with a tower painted brown, and it stands on a lot, $1,000,000 a year, 30 feet high, the ground floor is a grand room in its proportion, and on the left and right are porches, just across the way is Blaine's home, for which he pays $13,000 a year and on the other side of the circle is the residence in which Secretary Manning lives. The legation is not including to consider it advantageous a own houses at Washington.

A Blue-Necked Champion.

A novel feature of a ladies' bazaar recently held in Pictou county, N. S., was a prize to be awarded to the man voted the "champion liar" of the county. It was supposed that each political party would go it strong for some politician of the other party, and the result was anxiously watched. Much to the surprise of the politically inclined people, the counting up revealed that the party boss was far in the rear of Archie McLean, a veteran hunter and courier du bois from away back, and nobody was more surprised than Archie himself, who came to town that day to unfold some of his work yarns. In accepting the prize, which was nothing else than a "long bow," he made a felicitous speech, in which modesty and native uncertainty fought for mastery. "I thank you for your bounty. I appreciate it the more highly because I do not deserve it, because I never told a lie in my life."

The Youth's Companion celebrates this year its sixtieth anniversary. It might well be named the "Universal Companion," since its readers are found in 400,000 homes. It is so wisely edited that its pages are as interesting to adults as to the young people. Besides the best Short and Serial Stories it contains a great variety of popular and useful information on Natural History, Science, Home Arts, Games and Sports, and is fully illustrated. It costs but $1.75 a year, and a subscription sent now is credited to January, 1888.

A Prize.

Another lottery wave passed over New Orleans last Tuesday, and in its course struck Mr. Adolph L. Helman, son of our well-known fellow citizen, R. Helman, Esq., commission merchant on Decatur street. The blow was a severe one, and it struck Adolph so unexpectedly that he has not entirely recovered his senses, though in possession of more cents than he ever had in the course of his checkered career.

On Wednesday, with a dollarous expression in his eye, he visited the office of The Louisiana State Lottery Company, and inquired for the root doctor. This singular inquiry excited the curiosity of the office and he was invited to a seat in the lottery hall.

His pulse being felt, an extraordinary contraction of the muscles of the digits of his right hand was discerned. On reaching the same, a lottery ticket was revealed, bearing the number 34,562. A quick diagnosis of his case was made. The lottery wave had given him in the drawing on Nov. 9, for a thousand-dollar investment, the sum of fifteen thousand dollars.

The "root of all evil" in the form of very hard cash was at once administered, and Mr. Helman's singular inquiry was explained.

It is pleasant that with the writer, the fortunate holder (who is apparently 21 years of age) stated that he is a native of New Orleans, and is now working in the laboratory of the Plaquemine Sugar Refinery, learning the business under Mr. John Reynolds, and that the sudden accumulation of wealth will in no way affect his resolution to master his adopted profession.
