TRAVEL IN BOLIVIA.

An Adventurous Ride Through Thinly-Populated Country-tustoms of the Indians.

After a busy day I started down hill for Macha, bound for Ocuro. I reached there shortly after noon. Here even my government order did not hurry me off. They had mules, but no post llion; they were all out. At last I bethought myself of the corregidor of the village I found him, but he told me that the Ind ans were all off in the valley farming.

Lowled him to take something with me. Then I began talking about my business and against Chili, and showed aim my papers. That woke him up.

He sent out a couple of youngsters for one of the alcaldes at Quichoa. Half an hour later I was on my way rejoicing. I wanted to reach Aconcahua the same evening. All went well until I came to a place where two trails separatad. My servant, with the baggage, was far behind, and I was alone. I took out my map, but only one road was marked down. Looking at the sun I went on. At 6:80 o'clock I reached a large village. I congratulated myself on my fast riding. Entering the main street I asked for the posthouse, but was told that there was none. Then it occurred to me to ask the name of the place. They gave me some outlandish name. "Then this is not Aconcahua?" I asked. "Oh, no, sir; that place is After thirteen leagues from here.' some d ligent inquiry-for it took much trouble to find anyone speaking Spanish -1 was told of a short cut, an Indian trail, which reduced the distance to ight leagues. Something had to be done. Here I was in an Ind an village, alone; my baggage with an Indian I did not know, at the place I was seeking. Using a little boy as interpreter I at last hired an Indian to act as guide.

We started out at sunset, he afoot and leading. I pushed on as fast as my tired mule would go. Such a road I had never dreamed of. Down we would go into some canyou dark as right, across a stream, then up again. We kept on untl near midnight, when we reached a piece of more level but broken ground. My guide, whom I ever kept in front, stopped. I told him to go ahead. Three or four times he stopped. Each time I urged him on. I confess I felt uneacy, but there was only one thing to do-to go ahead. At last we saw an Indian hut with outhouses. My Indian started for it, and I concluded he wanted to stop here, and urging my mule on headed him off. At the same time I pulled out my revolver and ordered him forward. He raised both hands, saying in the most pitcons manner: "No, no." I felt sorry for the poor fellow, and thought to uyself; "go if you want to." He slipped by and disappeared. I turned my nule, expecting to pick my way alone. I went some five hundred yards, to find there was no trail. The moon was nearly dwon and it was getting dark. returned to the inclosure I had just eft, found an'opening in the wall, and toor. I pushed it open and found m - adult persons.

or as they were then called Incas, governed Peru, middle and south Bollvia, and the north of the Argentine. One after another different tribes submitted to the Incas, some of their own account. others by conquest. Long wars were carried on against the Aymaras, who a long time proved a distorting elemont. The conquest by the Spaniards ended these wars. To this day the Avmaras form a separate nation and do not associate much with the Quinchoas. Both tr bes, however are entirely controlled and kent under by the whites.

North of Poopo want little vegetation existed disappeared. As far as the ece could reach all was sand and rocks. In many places the wind had formed hills of shifting sand. Luckity it rained heavily a day or two before, hardening the ground somewhat. Without being in ormed, anyone could tell that he was mong a different class of Indians. The Quichoas, without exception, when meet ng strangers lift the hat and salute you. The Avmaras pass you without notice, looking at you sideways, as if they were either afraid of being attacked or preparing to attack you. Their women are badly treated. They earry the loads, while the mon-carry the dignity. They are more like the North American tribes. I can only explain great difference by the change of climate, which, although in a lower latitude, is much colder, owing to the high latitude, and in the barren soil, which makes the gaining of a livel hood more difficult. Still, I was informed that the Avmaras can be trusted when properly treated. You have to deal with them justly, but with severity. Many of them engage in raising liamas and freighting. They are usually in debt. A leading firm of Bolivia employs hundreds of them and has never made a loss with them. As they cannot read or right, all contracts are made verbal-Often when a man is on his deathbed he calls his children together. The eldest son takes the father's place, as the debt owed by the father becomes a family lien. Some houses attempted to overreach the Indians, and the result was that they lost the r investments. The Indians once in their debt ran off and moved to another part of the country, taking their mortgaged flocks with them. - Oruro (Bolivia) Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Care of Horses' Feet.

It is generally conceded by horsemen that ameness originates chiefly in the faulty treatment of the horse's foot. This fact suggests several recommendations for the mitigation of the evil: First, bare feet. It may be stated as a general proposition that any horse with fairly good feet need never be shod at all. In the barefooted horse the heels sprend out, the frozs descend, ridges form upon the soles, giving to the bottom of the feet a good purchase upon either a rough or smooth surface. He soon carns to rely upon himself and so adjusts his equilibrium to motion that he neither strains himself, nor slips nor stumbles. Horsemen have often given this plan a short, faint-hearted trial, but on the first manifestations of foot soreness at the end of a few weeks, and before the feet have become inured to the change, usually have the shoes replaced again .- [Spirit of the Turf.
