He had overlooked little passing troubles without realizing that they are eiten "the beginning of the end." He had neglected interests that concerned his very life, just as thousands of others do, simply because they come in a quiet and often unnoticed way. And it is cause for gratitude that his experience is having so good and arousing an effect on others who were drifting in the same dangerous direction, I was in the office of the Kingston Precenta, one of the best interior papers of the State, the other day, and had a talk with W. H. Winter its remain-talk with W. H. Winton, its popular manager. Quite naturally the conver-sation drifted to Mr. Smith's case, and the stimulating effect it was having on the people. Mr. Winton said: "I can specially sympathize with Mr. Smith for I have been through a much similar experience in my own family. My wife became troubled and weakened, as so many women do, and from small symptoms and beginnings grew worse until she finally began to bloat terribly. She had been attended by physicians, sometimes with temporary success, usually without. We finally determined to try the same means which Mr. Smith PRESCRIBING. employed so successfully, and my wife is not in her grave, but in the enjoyment of health wholly because Hunt's Rem-SUMMONS,

Why, when my wife began using the remedy she dis-covered the same medicine had been given her by a physician some time ago without her knowing the name of the medicine given at the time. I can also prove that bushel basketsful of empty bottles of Hunt's Remedy were taken out of a doctor's office after his death. No one supposes for a moment that the bottles were used for desk ornaments or bric-a-brac, but the contents had undoubtedly been given to patients in small quantities at high prices. The medical profession evidently knows no better or more valuable remedy. Mr. Cornelius B. Smith, the father of
