Physicians at Cleveland are puzzled over a curious accident that happened about six weeks ago to Mary Harmon, 19 year-old daughter of a farmer living near the city. While visiting at the electric light works a wire from her bustle came in contact with one of the machines, and she received a shock which paralyzed her for several days. When she recovered, her hair turned gray, her flesh disappeared and her skin became dried and wrinkled. Her temper became irritable. To all appearances she is now a woman of at least 60 years of age. Doctors think that her life may not be shortened, but that she will never be young again.
