OCTOBER.

In a sleepy way the sun chines down, The hills do mosses have turned to brown; The sweet-faced flowers in death lain down, This frosty weather.

The grapes are purple as they can be; The apples are ripe on our favorite tree, And ready to suther.

Lazily now comes up the down; Chilly and damp is the early morn; But like a smile the summer gone, is the noontide glory. There's a mournful marmuring in the breeze And a solemn shiver in the trees, And a deathly palor on their leaves So soon to wither.

Oh! when my summer that decline, And when my sun has crossed the line; When comes to me the autum i time,

To blight and sever, May I put summer glories by, And with no yearning, parting sigh, As earth smiles upward to the sky, Look to my Father.
