EDITOR OREGON SCOUT:-When it was announced with all decided upon as the most available assistant Postmaster-General, no man for an assistant justiceship.

there he finds a candidate in the person of Judge Woods, of the Federal with the borders of his state, as Chief | you see fit to call it, is turned toward Justice Fuller's fame was limited to you. Lean over gently and-let nathe lower courts in Chicago before his selection. But Judge Woods is nevertheless an able man and has done wonders for the party in his state. His elevation is most important of all, more desired by the representative men of Indiana than that of Mr. Miller would be.

If Mr. Miller nevertheless succeeds in obtaining the coveted honor, Secretary Noble will probably be transferred to the Department of Justice, where his recognized legal ability and careful attention to detail would earn him full mead of fame. In the Interior Department, with its hodge-podge collection of bureaus that bear no possible relation one to the other, there is no harmony and too much work. It is a department that demands the services of an experienced business man and politician and a man who has quite a good lot of furniture. been a long time in national public life. Such a man, unfortunately, Mr. Noble is not. Such a man Mr. Clarkson, the present Assistant Postmaster-General, certainly is, and his elevation he is. to the Secretaryship of the Interior would be pleasing to his party.

Texas gentlemen as you did a score of | does not acknowledge the corn we will years ago. Last week I saw one of see what we will see. these gentlemen come in to see Postmaster-General Wanamaker. His wide soft hat was in his hand, his long hair and moustache and imperial were black as night, and on his wide expanse of shirt front a big cluster diamond pin rested. His carriage was graceful and his address smooth and convincing. He only wanted to tell Mr. Wanamaker why the postmaster at his town should be removed at once and a republican friend of his appoint

"But I have promised Rev. Mr. incumbent shall be retained."

The Texan looked faint. "What has that sky pilot got to do about it?" he asked.

The secretary was shocked, and proceeded to tell his visitor that "sky pilot" was an offensive and improper term to employ and wound up with an exhaustive lecture on the importance of preachers in politics. The disgust in the Texan's face grew deeper and deeper, but he said nothing. He had wilted. The spirit that forty fights had not vanquished, oozed out at his fingers ends. When he rejoined a party of waiting Lone Star friends in the corridor, he could only tell them brokenly his tale of woe. A look of herrified astonishment came over their faces, and as he concluded there burst forth the wildest tirade of swear- Oregon, on July 11, 1889 viz ing that I ever heard, although I knew old Zach Chandler and listened to the teamsters talking to the mules in the wilderness. They first implored the various powers of the air to ostracize them from society, then they called upon the several powers of the earth to afflict Mr. Wanamaker, and they concluded after many other ceremonies in condensing the various portions of their bodies. Having thus performed their rites they departed to a saloon.
