EDITOR OREGON SCOUT :-

The first morning visitors at the White House Wednesday were Secretary Blaine and William Walter Phelps of New Jersey. Mr. Blaine carried a large official envelope which he gravely handed to the President, who opened it and took out a smaller envelope, which he handed to the Jerseycontained Mr. Phelps' commission as envoy extraordinary and minister plen- the mines during the week. ipotentiary of the United States to Germany. Mr. Phelps tried to look as if the eyes of two continents were on him and signally failed, and he and Mr. Blaine retired in good order,

This long expected appointment closes the chapter of the Halstead matter, and recognizes Mr. Phelps valuable services in the Samoan treaty arrangements. His association with that treaty conference will save him the trouble of making himself acquainted with the Germans.

His wealth was inherited. He is fifty years old, and was a practicing attorney up to 1868. He was several times in the House, where he attained some prominence as the leading Republican member of the Foreign affairs committee. His personal appearance, dress and manner are very peculiar. He was once before in the diplomatic service ie 1882 being sent to Austria, where he remained only a year. At the last Republican National convention he was a prominent candidate for the Vice-Presidential nomination, and later refused a renomination for the House to make the fight for Senator. The Senate is still his ultimate aim, and he looks forward exultingly to the next opportunity. His house at Teaneck was destroyed by fire and several valuable paintings and a large library burned, causing a loss of $150,000.

The men in congress who are good story tellers are few. The representatives, on the other hand who make a lame job of telling commonplace and worn out yarns are scores. When you hear some blundering heavy-moving statesman begin the "that reminds me of a man down my way," that's the time for disapearing. There is Congressman Cannon of Illinois, for instance, who has about as much humor in his composition as an owl. He went down the river to Marshall Hall opposite Mr. Vernon, last week, with the Six O'Clock Club, The club's hobby is after dinner speeches, and after awhile it was Cannons turn. It was evidently no time to talk of the speakership contest or the tariff. So the unfortunate legislator struggled through a few allusions to the beautiful seeners; the mansion at Mr. Vernon lying in the dusk of evening far across the placid river. Thus far he was all right, but when he struck the "far ncross the river", he was forever lost. With a fiendish delight, and perfectly unconscious of his fate, he began to tell that club of well informed gentlemen, the story of the dollar that Washington threw over the river and that a dollar went further then, etc. etc. The story that Senator Evarts told Lord Coleridge, the tale that has been told so often on the river that it is generally suicidal to attempt it, met a response of howls and cat-calls and Cannon sat down a ruined man.

It seems strange that men of average intelligence will go on telling aged and hoary chestnuts all their lives , without recognizing their triteness, without realizing that they bore people. "I wish", says Lord Greville in his delightful diary, "that Tom Moore had a better memory, for he often inflicts pain by telling the same story to the same people twice. But then this is made more bearable in that the stories are comparatively fresh and selected with care.

The number of delegates who come here to secure quarters and make other arrangements on the part of the Knight Templar commanderies for next fall's conclave is increasing. The triennial committee requests that it be distinctly understood that the accommodations of the city are not nearly exhausted and that over 1000,000 more people can be accommodated than have applied It is expected, however, that the crowd will be far larger than during the inauguration.

The local press is exercised over the civil service law; in fact, the regular summer discussion of the question has been resumed. The editors attack the system and zealous correspondents, in more or less ambigous English, march racing. Mr. Motley, marshal of the to its defense. Inasmuch as the dis- day, was not kept very busy.
