

CHOPPING THE HASH.

A wide, shady porch with a weather-stained floor.
A chintz-covered chair by the low kitchen door.
Where e'erward the glories aspiringly run
With flowers to the shadow and leaves to the sun.
On the sill, with a big wooden bowl in her lap
And her chopping-knife swinging a cheerful rap-tap.
With her cap-bordered crowned by an old-time calash,
Grandmother Grigson sits chopping the hash.

The robin that lives in the lites close by
Cocks his head in surprise and makes ready to fly.
But lingers to listen, the wise little elf,
While Grandmother Grigson talks low to herself:

"There's beef an' pertater, an' cabbage an' bean,
That goes to the makin' of hash good an' sweet.
And nary a one on 'em, take it alone,
But makes a poor meal, as you'll winitly own.
"There's joy an' there's sorrer, there's peace and there's strife,
That goes to the makin' of what we call life;
An' nary a one on 'em, come to the pint,
But makes a poor life, somehow, all out o' jint."

"For joy, yes, or peace, take it year arter year,
Are tame 'bout the seas'n'm' of sorrer and fear,
I've ate of the hash an' I've no fault to find,
And I'm thankful that my life wasn't all o' one kind."

HOW DESPOTS RULE.

Horrible Punishment Inflicted on Exiles in Siberia.

Living and Dying in Chains—Scourged, Starved and Frozen—The Fate of a Human Vulture—Half Has Not Been Told.

Alexander Baranoff, who was a Russian army officer, and who was sentenced to Siberia for alleged complicity in revolutionary schemes, spoke to a Boston Advertiser reporter as follows:

"Were it not for the charity of the people of Russia and Siberia no convict would ever live to see the end of his journey. The charities of the City of Moscow, from which so many prisoners start for Siberia, are great. It is the custom of the convicts to choose one of their own number as foreman when about to start on their long journey. When our company of eight hundred men and women, escorted by the soldiers with fixed bayonets, left Moscow our foreman went up and down the lines of people gathered to witness our departure. He collected alms from the crowd, the money being put into bags and carried along to the first station, where it was divided. The amount collected was so great that every man had twenty-seven dollars.

"The Government does not interfere with this alms-giving on the part of the people. In every little town through which you pass each villager takes off his hat and crosses himself, and throws in a penny for the benefit of the 'poor unfortunates,' as the convicts are termed by the people.

"All that the American people have heard and read about the sufferings endured by the prisoners exiled to Siberia is true. The half has never been told. The soldiers in Siberia have a name for the convicts which well expresses their condition. It may be translated freely as 'you are dead but not buried.' This is the truth. It is a living death.

"Typhoid fever is the worst scourge of the exiles. More convicts die of that than of any other cause. It could not be otherwise. The indescribable filth and frightful atmosphere of the crowded sleeping-places at the stations along the route are steady and sure breeders of the disease, which makes dreadful ravages among the prisoners. The fever broke out among us when we were at Tobolsk, and the prisoners died at the rate of thirty or forty a day. I was sick with the fever myself. The prisoners received medical attendance, such as it was. Tobolsk was a great stopping-place for transients, and at that time there were three thousand convicts confined in various barracks opening upon a large inclosure which was strongly fortified.

"Another thing from which the convicts suffer in Siberia is the cold. The cold of a Siberian winter is intense, and the convicts on the line of march, unable to walk fast and keep their blood in circulation because of their chains, suffer much. I remember one day, near the City of Tara, in the Province of Tobolsk, when it was so frosty that some of the baggage horses even lay down and died. We lost three women and five men that day, who, chilled through and through by the dreadful cold, succumbed and died in the road, their bodies being picked up and brought along to the next station.

"Some of the prisoners died in this way every week, especially in the Bratski steppe, and yet it was only the ordinary Siberian winter.

"Convict life in the mines of Siberia is well illustrated by our daily routine at the gold mines of Nerchinsk. We got up at four o'clock in the morning and had a breakfast of black bread and a bowl of gruel. We worked in the mines till noon and then had dinner, consisting of more gruel and black bread, and also a piece of meat. The meat was often horse meat, and young horse, let me tell you, isn't half bad, especially if you are a prisoner in Siberia.

"We worked in the mines again until dark. Supper consisted of cabbage or some other kind of soup, meat every two or three days, potatoes or other vegetables, which were frequently rotten, and black bread. In the mines we worked in true miserable with pick and shovel and lamp on hat. We still wore our chains. They never came off. The convicts had to live in them and die in them.

"Such a life, of course, sooner or later, caused the death of many convicts. The political prisoners, many of whom were of high rank and totally unused to manual labor and to such a diet and manner of living, suffered the most and succumbed generally the fastest. The ordinary offenders, thieves, common malefactors, etc., who came from the lower classes, stood prison life much better, for it more nearly resembled in its diet and daily toil their former life. I have known ordinary offenders, men from the lower classes, who were stout and strong, who had lived and worked in the mines for twenty years.

"The women prisoners at the mines were employed in scrubbing, washing and clothes-making. The delicately-nurtured ladies among them who were political offenders did not generally live long.

"Some of the severities practiced upon convicts in Siberia are justified, it must be said. Many of the convicts are the worst sort of humanity, including murderers, thieves, highwaymen and all kinds of offenders. We had one murderer in our community who had killed twenty-seven men.

"The political prisoners were forced to mingle with this class of convicts, some of them the dregs of humanity. In our company of eight hundred which left Moscow there were forty-eight political prisoners, four of whom were women. Sixteen of us were the officers of the Shlesburg Regiment, who had been court-martialed for alleged complicity with Polish conspirators. Three of us officers stuck together and worked together and finally escaped together. I do not know what ever became of the others. I suppose they are all dead by now.

"There is only one chance in one hundred of ever getting back to Russia when one is once sent to Siberia, for if a convict is suspected of having further political schemes it destroys his hope of a pardon.

"Many of the convicts, as I have said, are desperate men. Here is a story of the revenge some of them took upon a Siberian who had murdered some of their number. This Siberian was one of the Mongolian race called Butskis, and he had a farm about two hundred versts from Nerchinsk. It lay in the way by which convicts escaping from the mine generally passed. The region was mostly a dry desert, but this Bratski farmer had a good well of water which attracted the convicts, especially the green ones who had never heard of him.

"I was this farmer's custom to call to a convict whom he saw passing by wearing a good pair of shoes or a good coat and entice him within reach, and then shoot him from a pound but which he had loop-holed all about. He killed and robbed a number of convicts in this way.

"One day a party of seventeen convicts went by the farm, and some of the younger ones were for stopping. The more experienced convicts dissuaded them from doing this, saying that they would surely be shot. By means of a stratagem five of the convicts captured the farmer unarmed and away from his loop-holed hut. Then the best means of putting to death the murderer were discussed. Some were for hanging him, but one convict said: 'I'll show you a better way than that.' The farmer's legs were ripped up with a knife from the inside of the ankle and a lot of finely chopped horse-hair was rubbed into the wounds. The hair was obtained from the tail of a horse, which was cut off. The finely cut hair irritated the wounds much and put the victim in great agony. The convicts at Nerchinsk later heard, through the convict system of signs and communication, which is spread all over Siberia, like the tramp language in this country, that the farmer died of his wounds.

"I remember a convict at Nerchinsk named Butouska, who was an unruly fellow and often brought punishment upon himself. He used to get two hundred or three hundred lashes at a time for stealing from the other prisoners. Upon one occasion he was punished for some misdeed by being thrown into a dark cellar, the intention being to keep him there for two hours. But the overseer, who was a drunken fellow, forgot him, and he was not released.

"During the night the other convicts heard an awful yelling coming from the cellar into which Butouska had been thrown. In the morning there was nothing to be seen in the cellar but Butouska's bones. The rats had eaten the rest of him.

"I can recall many acts of cruelty to the prisoners. I remember one political prisoner, a young man of high rank who had been a Captain in my own regiment. He was much beloved by us all. Weak and run down by the hard life of the mines, he found himself utterly unable to work one day, and when they tried to make him keep at it he refused and declared he could not. He was taken to the hospital, where he died, being kept without a mouthful of food for twenty-four hours."

"The appearance upon news-stands of a dozen or more different architectural, real estate and similar publications catering to those who are thinking of building houses, is a sign of the increased interest in home making on the part of the people. Formerly such publications had only a limited and special circulation, and were never offered for general sale.

N. P. R. M.
The Northern Pacific has received twenty new colonist sleepers which are to be put in service on through trains this month. They are models of beauty from Barney & Smith, and contain many improvements over colonist sleepers now in use. Each car has fourteen sections, with gentlemen's toilet rooms in one end and ladies' room in the other. In one end is the Baker fire-proof heater, which heats the car by means of hot water conducted through pipes. In the opposite end is a wrought iron range surrounded by good kitchen facilities. The car is finished in ash, maple and butternut, beautifully polished. The sections are divided by sliding head-boards, effecting a privacy not possible in those now in use, where sections are separated by wire netting.

An ingenious arrangement of the seats enables them to be extended flat or with head rest when prepared for bedding, and each seat is provided with a box, in which can be stored bedding or small baggage. In each section, also is provided a table similar to those used in Pullman cars. The ladies' toilet room is supplied with marble top wash stand and force pump, and the berths have safety chains. Each car has a porter.

All passengers purchasing tickets, either first or second (formerly emigrant) via Northern Pacific R. R. have the use of these Sleeping Cars FREE OF CHARGE. Berths reserved at Northern Pacific ticket office, 121 First Street, corner Washington.

Successive Crops.—The proper way to manage a garden plot is to keep some crop growing in it from spring until the frosts appear late in the fall. Several objects will be gained by so doing, among them the destruction of all weeds, a finer condition of the soil, and a supply of fruits and vegetables for the table, as many vegetables grow quickly and give a supply in a short time after the seed is planted. As soon as the early peas are off late potatoes should take their place, and early cabbage may be followed by turnips. If the first crop of radishes are removed they will make room for string beans, and kale can be cleaned off for a later crop of peas. Peas, string beans, radishes, late beets and cabbage can be planted at any time, and if proper varieties be selected there is nothing to prevent a continual supply. Garden work can be made as important now as in the spring, and in putting down successive crops the weeds will have no chance to grow. In fact, every additional crop lessens the number of weeds to be killed. Such crops as lima beans may be grown along the line of the fence, especially if the fence is of wire. To keep tomatoes, late cabbage, turnips and lima beans in good growing condition the ground should be clean, which, of course, benefits the crops and keeps down the weeds.

Washington has agreed upon the representation in its Legislature. The Senate will be composed of thirty-five members and the House of seventy. The latter is never to be less than sixty-three nor more than ninety-nine.

The "601" at Truckee is in earnest and nearly 150 disreputable people have gone within two days. During the past two weeks over forty persons have been robbed or garroted, and it was about time to take a day off for a general cleaning up.

STONE IN THE KIDNEY.

I was taken with sharp pains in the lower part of my bowels in the region of the bladder. Shortly before I had mixed with my urine and a few weeks later I had an attack of gravel. I tried a number of doctors. One said it was gravel, another inflammation of the bladder, and another stone in kidney. For three months I was under the care of an eminent doctor at Albany, and constantly growing worse, went home to die. At this time I was induced to try Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., and am now robust and strong. A remedy which can do this for one so near death as I was should be known everywhere. I hope this statement will cause others afflicted as I was to use the Remedy. In the kidneys. When inactive they specify fall into disrepair. Those obstinate and fatal maladies, Bright's disease and diabetes, ensue with terrible certainty upon the inaction of the organs affected. Catarrh of the bladder, emaciation, gravel and stranguary are also to be apprehended from a partial paralysis of the bladder, of which weakness and sluggishness are the cause. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a fine tonic and promoter of activity for the renal organs, and one which can be relied upon to afford them the requisite stimulus without exciting them—an effect to be feared from the unmoderated alcoholic effect of commerce. A further beneficent effect of the Bitters, by renewing activity of the kidneys, is to enable them to drain from the blood in its passage through them, impurities productive of rheumatism and dropsy. Nervousness, fever and ague, constipation and dyspepsia are conquered by the Bitters.
