THE JUG-RIDGE LITERARY.

The School-Master's Assumption of Shakespeare Provokes Criticism.

The last meeting of the Jug Ridge Literary was a pleasurable event in many respects...

In his assumption of the soliloquy in "Richard III.," where the guilty King wonders whether it is better in the mind to suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune...

The young gent who threw the turban and hit the move-Be Shakespearean reader on the ear moves in the very best circles on the Ridge...

The temptation to strip him of his cloak and leave him standing there before a critical audience in those tight-fitting clothes was too great to resist...

WATER MONOPOLIES.

The laws of the Western States and Territories everywhere recognize and protect the right of the first or "prior appropriator" of water. If the first settler on the banks of a stream draws off in his ditch, one-half or the whole of the customary flow to irrigate his farm, he has the right to take this one-half or the whole flow forever, to the entire exclusion of any subsequent settler. But the same rule applies to rivers of large size. As the quick-witted Westerner stands by the side of one of the great rivers and looks over thousands of acres of desert land along its banks he sees a fortune in the situation. Only get capital enough together, organize a great company, dig an immense canal which will "appropriate" all the water in the river, and you command the whole valley. It is the position of the Western railroads repeated. Instead of waiting for settlers to come and dig little ditches as they need them, an immense capital digs one huge canal watering thousands of farms, and then draws settlers by advertisement and boom. So all over the West, throughout Colorado, in Central and Southern California, in Montana and Idaho, on the Salt and Gila rivers, in Southern Arizona, there are great companies, with capitals running into the millions, putting this idea into effect. The canals they dig are twenty, thirty or even fifty miles long. The largest are a hundred feet wide and ten feet deep, very rivers in themselves. They follow the contour of the country, running back further and further from the river as the latter falls away. The main canals give off lateral branches at frequent intervals, and by an ingenious system of gates, crossings and ditches sends water to every foot of arable ground between it and the river. The land belongs to the Government, and is taken up by individual settlers at merely nominal prices under the "Desert Land act." But the water belongs to the Canal Company, and it is this water that the settler really pays for.—Walter Gillette Bates, in Scribner.

RETREAT FOR DOGS.

A Queer English Institution Patronized by Queen Victoria.

Some twenty-seven years ago such a home was made at Battersea, a part of London, by a benevolent lady. Since her death it has been carried on by an association composed of many of the nobility.

During the last year 12,881 dogs have been admitted to the home, most of them being brought in by the police. Over 1,500 were restored to their owners, and an equal number found new homes. Most of the animals are gathered from the streets, where they are found wandering, and if sick or injured are painlessly destroyed. The dogs to be killed are placed in an air-tight apartment large enough to admit 100 at a time, for sometimes a large number must be disposed of at once, and by means of apparatus chloroform is introduced, and the poor creatures quietly go to sleep never to waken.

A crematorium has been erected in connection with the home, which is the common grave of the dogs destroyed, and the bones are afterward sold, the proceeds being used toward the expenses of the institution. One of the wails, a noble great Newfoundland, now owned by a lady who is interested in the home, begs upon the wharves, and the last year collected in a box suspended from his neck about twenty-five dollars, which, no doubt, from a grateful heart, he was most happy to present to the home.

Connected with the dogs' home is a cats' house, where stray Tommies are cared for and pet Tabbies are boarded to accommodate their indulgent owners; and as more than $160 dollars was last year received for board, it is quite evident that this institution is appreciated.

The Queen and the Prince of Wales are the patrons of the home, the former giving fifty dollars every year towards its support. No dog is allowed to be taken away from the institution unless it is claimed or sold; all who enter the door of this home may reasonably expect forever after a comfortable, happy life.—Well-Spring.

KEEPING A HORSE.

It's Not Such an Expensive Luxury as Many Suppose.

Driving a horse is not such an expensive luxury as one would suppose. Of course it costs lots of money to be able to drive a crack. A first-class trotter costs as much as one wants to pay. A good 2:30 horse can be had for about $5,000, and a thousand more can be added to that amount for every half second he can go faster than 2:30 down to 2:12. Those that trot faster than that are phenomenal, and bring fabulous prices. Axtell's price was $100,000; Sunol's $50,000, and Maud S's $40,000. A good three-minute horse that can do fair work on the road can be bought for $200. Of course he won't beat every thing he meets, but he will make a good showing. This is how a bill for a horse and rig would look:

Table listing costs for horse and rig: Fair 3:00 horse, Buggy (second hand), Harness, Whip, Blankets, Total $300.

The buggy, blankets, whip and harness can all be bought at an auction sale. An experienced man should be consulted, though, before the purchase is made, or the buyer may be swindled. The cost of taking care of the horse would make a bill for a year look like this one:

Table listing costs for horse care: Twelve months board at $25 per month, $300; Shoeing, $100; Painting buggy and repairing harness, $20; Sundries, including veterinary surgeon, $12. Total $432.

This would mean an outlay of about $7 a week. A good top-coat is necessary, and so are a pair of driving gloves. These will cost about $60. So that the complete rig would necessitate an outlay of about $450; and it would cost about $7 a week to keep it. But then what an amount of good healthy enjoyment can be gotten out of it.—N. Y. Star.
