

EXPLOSIVES IN DOSES.

The Use of Gun Cotton and Nitro-Glycerine in Medical Practices.
Dr. H. H. Burchard, a famous Philadelphia physician, speaking of the progress of medical science in these latter years, said to a reporter the other day:

"Have you any idea of how far high explosives are used in medicines? You can not get your knowledge from books unless you ransack five hundred volumes and pick up the scattered items here and there. It may surprise you to know that they are in daily use and of the greatest value in all sorts of diseases and injuries.

"There is, for example, gun cotton, or, as we call it, prokylin. It is twice as powerful as gunpowder, but very much inferior to dynamite or nitro-glycerine. Dissolved in ether, it makes that wonderful compound we call collodion. In this shape it is employed to protect raw or injured surfaces. It dries rapidly—in fact, almost as fast as it is employed—and leaves behind a fine, elastic artificial skin, which is air and water-proof against microbes and disease germs. Mixed with cantharides, collodion makes the best blistering plaster known to science. Mixed with tannin or tannic acid, it makes a wonderful remedy for stopping the flow of blood from wounds. In cases of scalding and burning collodion enables the profession to cover the exposed flesh in a manner never before possible. No secretion of the body affects it, nor, on the other hand, does it exert any unpleasant or objectionable influence upon the system.

"But of even greater value is nitro-glycerine. When used in medicine it is largely diluted, one part being mixed with one hundred parts of alcohol, and one drop of the resultant mixture is a dose. In this form it is an admirable antidote in cases of neuralgia of the heart and many cases of nervous disturbances of the human body. Thus it has been used and given wonderful relief in nervous asthma, hiccoughs, headaches and similar disorders. It has repeatedly cut short an attack of the chills and fever, and so eminent an authority as Dr. Robert Bartholow recommends it in certain forms of Bright's disease, and also for that most miserable of earthly ailments, sea-sickness.

"Thus far we have only begun to know the medical virtues of gun-cotton, nitro-glycerine and amyl-nitride. Beyond these there are over six hundred explosives of which we know little or nothing as to their real character, and nothing at all regarding their action upon the physical organizations. It does seem curious, however, that substances which in large quantities are destructive of life and property should, in small ones, be beneficial to the sick and injured. The gun-cotton which blows a man up enables the physician to destroy the pain of his aw members and to heal them in less time than was ever before possible with other remedies."—Washington Star

AT FRIEDRICHSRUHE.

The Retired Chancellor's Surroundings in the Sachsenwald.

Prince Bismarck's home at Friedrichsruhe, where the ex-Chancellor now leads the simple life of a country gentleman, is a most secluded spot, though only an hour distant from Hamburg by express train. The estate is surrounded by forest land—the Sachsenwald—so little frequented that the deer are quite tame and scarcely pay attention to the train rushing by. Little of the estate is visible from the railway, but thick under-wood, with an occasional glimpse of the narrow river Au, covered with reeds, which turns the Prince's saw-mills. The house lies to the right of the line, but is hidden from the rain by a high, red brick wall which also borders the main road, while the river and hedges close in the two remaining sides. Originally Friedrichsruhe was a hunting lodge, built in 1763 by Count Frederick of Lippe-Sternburg, and later it became an inn, called Frascati, where the Hamburgers flocked for picnics on holidays. When William I. presented the estate to his Minister, Prince Bismarck added to the house, but kept the main building intact. It is a two-storied edifice, painted light yellow, the Prince's apartment being on the ground floor, while the rooms up stairs are occupied by the Princess and the Countess Rantzau, the Prince and Princess' only daughter, with her three little boys. Handsome shrubs and a fine pine tree are planted in the front of the house, the river Au running at the foot of the grounds and forming a tiny waterfall.

Prince Bismarck has no near neighbors except in the little village of Friedrichsruhe, with its inn and a few scattered houses inhabited by foresters, postal and railway officials, the workmen at the saw-mills with their families, a tailor, a blacksmith and a miller. The only important personage is the head forester of the Sachsenwald, who is mayor of the village and the manager of Schwarzenbeck—another of Prince Bismarck's small properties which lie close by, like the farms and pastures of Silke and Schonhausen. The Prince enjoys talking local gossip with the forester, inquiring anxiously whether the cattle thrive in the meadows or whether the wood-cutting season has been profitable. Princess Bismarck would often say at the Parliamentary receptions: "My husband takes more real interest in a turnip than in all your politics," and the Prince has now the opportunity of proving the truth of this wisely criticism.—London Graphic.

Passer-by (to Tommy, who has just been fighting): "Wouldn't your father whip you if he knew you had been fighting?"

Tommy—"Well, that depends. If the other boy whipped me pop would whip me too; but if I licked the other boy, pop would just say, 'I wouldn't fight, if I were you, Tommy.'—Lippincott.

WOUNDED HONOR AVENGED.

How a Proud Beggar Would Teach the Haughty Rich a Lesson.

There was a certain air of pride and even of hauteur about him as he came down the front steps of the Massachusetts avenue mansion, notwithstanding the fact that he had just been refused a small loan of only fifteen cents, a request for which had been conveyed by the maid servant to the mistress of the house.

"I have been grossly insulted," he said, addressing a young man with a large folio note book who had paused a moment on the sidewalk for the purpose of investigating the contents of an accidental ash barrel in hopes of raking therefrom a news item of some sort.

"Who did it?" asked the Star reporter, for it was he.

The proud-looking stranger pointed with his thumb over his left shoulder at the handsome residence behind him. "I demanded a trifling pecuniary accommodation, he explained hoarsely, and they sent me down an insolent message of refusal."

The stranger pulled thoughtfully at a wisp of long black hair that hung over one ear. Finally he said:

"Have it!"

"A scheme of revenge?" asked the newspaper man interestedly—for he, too, detested aristocrats.

"Exactly."

"What is it?"

"Butter."

"That's the idea. I propose to get even by buttering the steps."

"You mean to bring them down to your level, eh?"

"To some extent."

"But butter costs money."

"It needn't be the best butter, you know."

"Of course not; but enough even of a poor article to make a toboggan slide of the steps would be a large expense."

"You mistake my object," he said. "I do not contemplate summoning the law of gravity to my aid for the purpose of destroying the family. Too much risk would be involved. What I propose doing is simply to put a little grease on those costly stone steps during the night. Five minutes' work with a small quantity of second-hand butter will do about $500 worth of damage. You know the grease sinks into the stone, and nothing short of the chisel will ever get it out again. I'll teach these haughty rich people that it is cheaper to extend a small financial assistance—to the extent, say, of fifteen cents—to a gentleman temporarily embarrassed than to make him a deadly enemy, prepared at the first favorable opportunity to spread butter and desolation in their paths. Ha, ha! I will not be revenged. Farewell!"—Washington Star.

The Largest Perfect Gems.

The largest perfect diamond in the world is now the Imperial, that was exhibited at the Paris exposition last year, and which is valued at $1,000,000. This is the most valuable stone in the world and is owned by a syndicate. The biggest and best ruby in existence is owned in London and is valued at $50,000. It has no parallel, even in the crown jewels, and it is related that the Duchess of Edinburgh carried it all the way to St. Petersburg for the Czar to have a look at it. The largest and most beautiful cat's-eye in the world weighs 170 carats, is owned in London, and is insured for 30,000 rupees. The finest private collection of pearls in the world is owned by Mme. Dosne, sister-in-law to M. Thiers. The biggest emerald in the world weighs 2,950 carats, and is in the Imperial Jewel office in Vienna. The largest and costliest cat's-eye in the world is owned by a Moorman of Ceylon, who dug it up himself from the mines. He has been offered $50,000 for it but declines to part with it at that figure, saying that, if he liked, he could cut it up into forty small pieces and sell each piece for about $5,000, aggregating pretty nearly $2,000,000.—Inventor.

SELF-PRAISE.

Self praise is no recommendation, but there are times when one must permit a person to tell the truth about himself. When what he says is supported by the testimony of others no reasonable man will doubt his word. Now, to say that ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS are the only genuine and reliable porous plasters made is not self-praise in the slightest degree. They have stood the test for over thirty years, and in proof of their merits it is only necessary to call attention to the cures they have effected and to the voluntary testimonials of those who have used them. Beware of imitations, and do not be deceived by misrepresentation. Ask for ALLCOCK'S, and let no solicitation or explanation induce you to accept a substitute. ALLCOCK'S CORN and BUNION SHIELDS effect a quick and certain relief.

It is altogether wrong and improper, besides being impolite, for any one to speak of the doctor's servant as the valet of the shadow of death.

A HAUNTED HOUSE.

This body of ours has been likened to a tenement. It often has a haunted apartment—the stomach. Scared by the diabolical spirit, dyspepsia, indigestion and refuses to return. What can break the spell, what can raise the ban laid upon the unhappy organs? We answer unhesitatingly. Rosendor's Stomach Bitters, and we warn, too, in the response by the recorded testimony of myriads, covering a period of over a third of a century. A course of the Bitters, begun in any stage of the affliction and persistently followed, will terminate in cure positive, not partial. The Bitters restores tone to the digestive nerve, renews and purifies the juices exuding from the cellular tissue that act upon the food digestively, expels bile from the stomach and the blood, and promotes a regular habit of bowels. Malaria, kidney complaint, nervousness, rheumatism and neuralgia give way to this medicine.

J. Eugene Jordan, M. D.

Doctor, my little daughter 7 years old was taken with scarlet fever; was sick two days before I went for a doctor. He came and told me she had scarlet fever and was a very sick child, and seemed to feel quite concerned about her. I got the medicine he prescribed, and went to Gogging's and got M. O. G. of your medicine, and stayed by her night and day; gave it every fifteen minutes. By the way, I told the doctor not to come until I sent for him. He asked me if I knew what a dangerous disease it was. I told him I could come for him if needed. My mother has had considerable experience with scarlet fever, and she was the most frightened woman you ever saw, but I had confidence in your treatment. From the first hour she took it she began to get better; in twelve hours her water commenced to increase, and from the first dose she began to recover and never stopped.

I had my little boy 4 years old take a little occasionally; in about two weeks a little of the rash came out on him, and that ended the whole thing.

Mo her says my little girl's rapid recovery is the greatest case she ever knew in all her experience.

I gave her just $6 worth of your treatment. A. H. PRATT, Sacramento, Cal.

ALL ABOUT NERVOUSNESS.

An Insidious Disease Which Destroys Its Thousands.

Nervousness, or nervous weakness, is a disease of comparatively modern growth. It loves a brilliant mark, and the best and brightest men and women of our land become its prey. There are many causes which bring it on—overwork, worry, improper food, exposure, over-indulgence in alcoholic beverages or tobacco, and excesses of different kinds.

Nothing presents a more pitiable sight than a person suffering from serious nervous prostration. The mind becomes weak and forgetful; the patient cannot sleep, and there are terrible pains in the head. Feelings of despondency or depression are ever present; there is a restlessness of the eyes, and a disinclination to meet people; the features become pale, careworn, and haggard; the muscles weak and flabby, and there is a general sense of being unfit for anything.

Some of our most distinguished people have trod this awful road which ends in paralysis, apoplexy, paresis, insanity, leath. Happily a cure has at last been discovered for this fearful disease. An eminent medical gentleman, professor in Dartmouth College, has made a discovery which will bring happiness to many a heart. It is called Paine's Celery Compound, and is nature's own restorative for weakened nervous power. Under its invigorating and health-giving action, the mind will soon regain its vigor; the eyes will sparkle as of old, the muscles become firm, the nerves strong, the blood will pulsate rapidly and steadily, and the tide of health will come back again.

This reliable preparation creates an appetite, gives sound sleep and as yet is the only known remedy for nervous diseases. If your head aches or you feel worn, do not delay the use of this true strengthener.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or LUNACY RICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now securing a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy.
