"Is he dead, O! is he dead?" cried the girl whom he had saved, and she krelt down beside him, took off his cap and brushed the damp hair back from Lisforehend. "No, he is not dead," said a policeman, Mary's policeman, who happened for once to be where he was needed. "He lives just below here. We will carry him to the house." They picked him up and carried him gently into the little. cottage. Mary was overcome with fright and would have fainted had not "Teddie" been there to assure her that Willie was all right, "only hurt a bit," The next day the young lady whom Willie had saved came down in her carriage to see how he was She swept in through Mary's little kitchen like a queen, and Rachel, who was sitting on the step of the back door, looked at her in amazement, at the long scalskin cloak and the diamonds in her cars, "My, nin't she grand? THE LOVELY VIOLET.

BEAUTIFUL LITTLE FLOWER.

Mediaval Times.

The Poets Know More Than the Scientists of Such Things-Shakespeare's Reference to the Violet-The Superstitions of

According to the scientists, who are a duil sort of folk, however, and who love to hide their ignorance behind long names of tearned sound, the violet is a genus of exogenous herbs of the order Violacce and is a native of the northern temperate zone. But the poets know a taking it my wife got up and went to great deal more than the scientists, for they were torn before them and will survive them and the poets tell us all about the creation of this fragrant flower When Jupiter was in love with lo and changed her into a heifer, deeming that common grass and flowers were no fit diet for a sweetheart of the king of gods. he created the violet that she might feed upon its damity petals And, it is added. when to died violets sprang from her body Shakespeare alludes to this old tradition when he says: Lay ner F the earth

And from her fair and unpolluted flesh

And from her fair and ampoilated flesh May values spring The Greek name for violet was Ion, and possibly because that suggested Ionia, whence the Athenians were fabled to have spring, the flower was a great fa-vorite with the Athenians, who adopted it as their badge and loved to weave it It as their badge and loved to weavent into the chaplets which they wore at banquets, thinking, indeed, that it was a guardian against drunkenness.

Alcibiades went to Agathos crowned Sappho." The Athenian orators, when striving to win the favor and attention of the people, were wont to address them as "Athenians, crowned with violets!"

Among the Romans also the violet was highly esteemed. Ovid, in speaking of the ancient sacrifices and contrasting their noble simplicity with the garish display of more degenerate times, says that "if there was any one who could add violets to the chaplets wrought from flowers of the meadow he was a rich man." And Virgil, to emphasize the desolation of nature mourning the death of Daphnis, speaks of the violet as replaced by the thistle.

THE VIOLET IN THE EAST.

In the east the violet had a great reputation among those races whose religious were rather emotional than mystical The Arabian poets, like their brother bards of other climes, bade the wealthy and haughty learn humility from this lowly wayside preacher. It was a favorite flower with Mohammed, and hence has acquired a peculiar sanctity in Moslem countries. "As my religion is above others," quoth the prophet, "so is the excellence of the odor of violets above other odors. It is as warmth in winter and coolness in midsummer."

Its popularity is highly creditable to human nature. Except that in some regions of the east it has been used to flavor sherbets, and that in Scotland it has been mistakenly used as a cosmetic, it has been universally cherished only for its modesty and its beauty and its delicate fragrance.

CORPORAL LA VIOLETTE.

In modern France the flower has been adopted as the emblem of the Bonaparte family "Corporal la Violette" or "Papa la Violette" was the title bestowed by his partisans upon the first Napoleon after his banishment to Elba-significative of their confidence that he would "return again in the spring

Early in January, 1815, a number of colored engravings made their appearance in Paris representing a violet in full bloom, with the leaves so arranged as to form the profile of Napoleon. Underneath was this significant motto, "II reviendra avea le printemps." The phrase became an imperial toast, and the flower and color were worn as a party distinction And, in fact, the sentiment was realized. When March 20, 1815, saw Napoleon enter the Tuilleries, after his escape from Elba, he found the grand staircase filled with ladies, who nearly smothered him with violets.

On the death of the king of Rome very pretty devices in violets were made, showing on the edge of the petals profiles of the members of the Bonaparte family, each profile forming the outer edge of the petal looking at the flower and leaving the face white.

On the death of Napoleon III, also, the visitors to Chiselhurst word or carried there bunches of violets. - New York .
