He was found hid in the grass, but refused to accompany Mr. Hughes to town, and before he could get a warrant for his arrest, or assistance to take him, he had again skipped out in the direction of La Grande. Mr. Hughes thought best to let the matter drop, as the man could not be convicted of a crime anyway. Mr. Hughes was owing the man some on the job, but was ready to pay him as soon as he completed the work. The man has been at work at La Grande for several days past. Mr. Hughes is of the opinion that Conley got on the train Sunday night and came up to North Powder, and proceeded to his ranch and cut his harness in this manner, as he knows of no other enemy in the country.

The harness were almost new and were cut beyond repair. It goes pretty hard with Mr. Hughes, who was in the midst of harvest, causing him to lose considerable time and money. Col. Boone and His Liberated Lions.

Col. Edgar Daniel Boone is the name of the man who is at present astonishing the people of this country by his performance with five full grown ferocious lions, all liberated and given the entire freedom of the ireus arena.

These savage brutes, under the colonel's guidance, are made to do about every act that dogs, horses and ponies have been instructed to perform, and even more, for these lions in addition to dancing, posturing, leaping, racing in harness, etc., actually ride trieveles, a feat no horse has yet been able to accomplish.

The colonel is a Kentuckian by birth, and a direct descendant of Kentucky's famous pioneer-Daniel Boone,

The arena in which the lions are liberated s surrounded by a tall and closely barred steel fence. This insures perfect safety to the audience whatever may be the fate of the lion performers.

Col. Poone is accompanied in his exhibition of these liberated Ifons, by Miss Carotta and a large German hunting hound who frolics with the lions while the lion-Charles M. Rinchart, a young farmer tamer looks on, and subsequently particiof their jumping, racing, posturing, dancing, and driving accomplishments.

Eight pounds of lean meat constitute the daily rations of each of these trained lions, Col. Boone was formerly an ivory hunter in Africa. He captured the lions he now exhibits, in the interior of that country

He has traveled with his lions all over the world and met with many thrilling scenes.

The only way in which lions can be trusted to perform outside the cage, is by educating the brutes. They possess but Harst, J M (2) little brains, and it required many months: of patient effort to make these pitiless monsters comprehend what they must do.

The hon, above all things else, hates to be mastered, and if he is urged to perform a difficult act, rebels at once and turns upon his trainer.

Col. Boone says the popular idea that a lion can be kept in subjection by the mere power of the human eye is all nonsense. He says there is nothing of the sneak about the lion, if he means to attack you he gives you fair notice.

He never cuts his lions claws, because he says it would make them more savage. Col Boone has appeared with his lions in all the leading cities of Europe-150 ex-
