G little feet! that such long years
Mast wander on through hopes and fears,
Must ache and bleed beneath your load,
I, hearer to the wayside inn.
Where toil shall cause and rest begin,
Am weary thinking of your road!

O little hauds, that weak or strong Have still to serve or rule so long, Have still so long to give or ask; I, who so much with book and pen Have toiled among my fellow-men, Am weary thinking of your task. O little hearts! that throb and beat With such impatient feverish heat, Such limitless and strong desires; Mine that so long has glowed and burned, With passions into askes turned Now covers and conceals its fires.

O little souls as pure and white
And crystalline as rays of light,
Direct from heaven, their source divine;
Refracted through the mist of years,
How red my setting sun appears.
How lurid looks this soul of mine.

On reaching the water, like a spent rocket, he "fetches a little breath." and perceiving the mainmast floating near him amid the other debris of the wreck, contrives to gain it. At the same moment he sees a young man rising from the water, who exclaims, "I have got it?" (meaning a spare yard). "My God!" cried I to myself, "is it possible Groceries and Provisions, that any one can have survived !"

With two wounds on his head, and bruises all over his back, he could do little to help another, but what lay in his power he did do. While seated with his co survivor on the mast, the sun, the great hope-giver to all in calamity, "went down to our great affliction," leaving them destitute of all hope of succor.
