7. 8 months old, broke out with other and burning was intensed to his fibe course of bad roads, " said Presid Marvin Hughlit, of the Milwaukée a St. Paul railroad. "I know how it for I have farmed myself. We used pick out the deepest hele in the road and dump in the dirt. As soon as it rained the place became impassable. Not all locatives, however, have poor roads. In southern Wisconsin the roads are naturally good, while 200 miles west the roads are about as poor as they can be. If by any means, through a systematic plan, they could be improved, we would willingly lend assistance." — Chicago News.

Old Farmer John drove off to town Allon a rainy day. The glistening highway, up and down, With mire shown all the way.

The gentle, weeping raindrops fell And had fail'n all the night: The bottom of that highway—well, "Twas literally "out of sight." But John had hitched his sturdy steeds

His sturdy steeds and true, That often 'mid such urgent needs Had boldly struggled through. And John had sworn a big round oath. With deep and bated breath, He'd rather brave the deep, forsooth, Thrice o'er than starve to death.

For visions of the flour bin-"Twas empty, he could see, And for a week no sugar in His coffee cup had he.

And so, amid the sea of mire, Those steeds right valiant reel, While turbid waves creep higher, higher, Upon the wagon wheel.

Oh, help, ye powers that rule the wave, Wherever ye may be; Reach down and this poor mortal save From out that turbid sea.

They sink; now just the horses' ears Still strugging through the flood; Now nothing but John's hat appears Above that sea of mud. The rich, black loam of Illinois

The rich, black toan at: Above that outfit met: And, since our roads are bottomless, They may be sinking yet. —Good Roads.
