YOU DON'T KNOW

what a comfort it is to have ready at hand a remedy that never fails to relieve Constipation, and that, without pain or discomfort, and almost immediately cures headaches, and dispels every symptom of Dyspepsia. Such a remedy is found in Simmons' Liver Regulator—not a sweetened compound to nauseate, or an intoxicating beverage to cultivate an alcoholic appetite, but a medicine pleasant to the taste, and perfectly harmless when given to the smallest child. S. L. R. never disappoints. It possesses the virtues and perfections of a reliable remedy of the kind endorsed by eminent physicians.

"It affords me pleasure to add my testimony to those who receive annually in reference to your valuable medicine. I have used it for many years, and it is the best family medicine on the market. I have prescribed it for my children, and it has given them relief. I am, W. F. PARK, M. D., Tracy City, Tenn."

SAVORY SOUFFLES.

A Dainty Dish to Be Eaten Right Out of the Oven.
A savory souffle is one made of vegetables, poultry or game, a delicate, dainty dish which is raised up to airy lightness by the use of the whites of eggs, and which must be eaten the moment it is out of the oven to be in perfection. Potato souffles are especially nice, but unfortunately this term is applied to two entirely different preparations of potato, first to a fried potato, swollen by a peculiar method, and second to the regular potato souffle.

For this last preparation, the New York Tribune says, wash and scrub with a brush six potatoes of even, medium size. As soon as they are thoroughly cleaned put them into the oven and bake them until they are thoroughly done. Cut off an end of each one and scrape out the contents without breaking the skins. Wash the potatoes until they are free from lumps. A vegetable press is very good for this purpose.

When the potatoes are mashed and perfectly smooth add a tablespoonful of butter, a teaspoonful of salt, a gill of very rich milk or cream boiling hot, and finally the whites of two eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Fill the potato shells with this mixture without putting on the ends and stand them up in a quick oven to bake for about 10 minutes or until they are slightly browned or swollen.

A souffle of spinach is also especially nice. Wash about two quarts of spinach. There should be considerably over a cup of spinach when it is cooked. Cook the spinach in abundance of boiling salted water for about 20 minutes, then drain it and plunge it into cold water. When it has become a little cold press out all the moisture and rub it through a fine sieve. Add the yolk of three eggs, a pinch of pepper, a little salt, two tablespoonfuls of whipped cream and the whites of four eggs whipped to a stiff froth. Stir the cream and eggs in as delicately and lightly as you can, rather "folding" them of salt, a gill of very rich milk or cream boiling hot, and finally the whites of two eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Fill the potato shells with this mixture without putting on the ends and stand them up in a quick oven to bake for about 10 minutes or until they are slightly browned or swollen.

Care of the Hands.
To keep the hands soft, rub them as seldom as possible unless in a dry bath of meal removed with a chamomile skin. Even then be sure to dust on some simple powder. At night try on a paste of cornstarch, lemon and a little rose water. This is what Canadian girls use, and it can be recommended for brunettes. Remember that to check perspiration suddenly and so close the pores of the skin would impair circulation and destroy just that fresh white look which distinguishes beautiful hands.

You Must Have It.
Here is the skirt which you must wear this summer if you would be in fashion and would have your gown bear the mark of 1893. There are no hoopskirts concealed in it, and there will be none. But there is a heavy horsehair lining from facing to waist, and the general effect is really graceful. The reign of the train is over, and the spring and summer skirts will be of walking length only.

Gift For an Invalid.
An appropriate gift for an invalid who can read but for a few minutes at a time is a set of book markers made of light cardboard in the shape of old-time thumb papers. They are little triangular affairs that slip on one corner of the page and are decorated with some slight pen and ink drawing that will briefly amuse the patient. As their value is trifling, there is no temptation to hoard contagion by retaining them after they have served their purpose.

TRIAL AND TRIUMPH.

Story of a Temperance Hero Who Would Not Break His Promise.

The days of heroism are never past, and the history of temperance in the days when it was everywhere denounced would afford some noble specimens. I have often spoken of Willie Bartlett, and it will interest those of your readers who admire pluck wherever it is found to read of his trial and triumph.

Willie's father was a noble father, one of the multitude whom the drink sweeps away who are said to be "nobody's enemies but their own"—a saying terribly false, as Willie's mother and the fatherless children soon felt. Burdened with debt and with six small children to support, her prospects were very dark indeed.

After awhile Willie's mother determined to apprentice him to his father's trade, and after some negotiations the master agreed to take him. Having a high regard for the father, the master took him into the works and gave him in charge of his principal foreman. As soon as the master had left the foreman said:

"Well, Willie, we'll make a man of thee here for thy father's sake, and we must have a footing to drink thy success, and as I know money is not very plentiful at home, I will pay for it myself," and immediately one of the other lads was sent for a quart of beer.

Poor Willie was bewildered with this arrangement, for his mother had trained him up a strict abstemious and had taught him to hate his father's murderer—the drink. The beer was soon brought, and the men gathered round and each drank to Willie's success. Then the foreman said, "I will guarantee you a pair for the lot!"

"Now, my lad, drink success to all," Willie quietly replied, "I am a teetotaler and never touch the drink." Irritated at the boy's reply, the foreman said: "None of that nonsense. We'll have no teetotalism here. Take the drink at once."

Willie said, "I promised mother I would never touch the drink, and I never will." "Look here," said the man, "we are not going to have two masters here, so drink it up." "I cannot, and I will not," said Willie.

Mad with the boy's rebellion against his orders, the foreman said: "This is all nonsense! You will have it in you or over your head, and I will not let you go until you have drunk a quart of beer." "Well," said Willie, "I can't help it. I will never drink. You can throw it over me if you like. I have brought here a clean jacket and a good character. You may spoil my jacket if you will, but you shall never spoil my character."

Struck by the boy's earnest look, the man's better nature prevailed, and turning away he said to Willie: "You are a good fellow, but I believe I'll make a man."

CUCUMBER GREEN.

M. Durancon, a Partisan shopkeeper, desiring to wind up his affairs, a friend and merchant of the neighborhood lent him one of his own employees, a man of experience and skill in such matters, who took upon himself the task of setting up everything to the best advantage.

In some dusty pasteboard boxes on the dusty shelves of the little shop the diligent and active Julius Roseway by name, came across a lot of 2-button kid gloves of the most extraordinary color—a tender light green, of a hue so weirdly brilliant as to make an unwary person who dared to fix his gaze upon this phenomenon in coloring equate like a crossroads at the end of two minutes.

"Why, what have we here?" demanded Roseway, surprised.
"Durancon has a heavy sigh."
"The greatest mistake and misfortune of my life," he murmured. "They date those gloves from the time of the first manufacture of the various aniline dyes. A Swedish commercial traveler purchased one to buy them from the time of the first manufacture of the various aniline dyes. 'Aniline, a colorless liquid with an aroma like wine and an acid flavor. It was discovered by W. C. Perkin, a chemist of Stockholms, and is used exclusively in dyeing. Thanks to the further discoveries and efforts of other chemists, a Stockholm druggist, aniline has now become the foundation of numerous coloring substances, brown, violet, blue, red, yellow of dazzling hue, etc."

"Well, Willie, we'll make a man of thee here for thy father's sake, and we must have a footing to drink thy success, and as I know money is not very plentiful at home, I will pay for it myself," and immediately one of the other lads was sent for a quart of beer.
