BREEDING RACE HORSES.

Breeding race horses has been reduced

Lias Biackburn was in his day one of the most successful and notorious moonshiners of southwestern Virginia. Still, Lias was by no means an unprincipled man. His contempt for the revenue laws was complemented by a regard for a code of morals, peculiarly his own, that gave him no little worry, for it particularly invelghed against unreasonable inebriety. Lias never was drunk without cause, and "any other reason why" being no reason for a drink to his logical mind he was often sober for five consecutive days.

After one of these periods of abstinences Lias found occasion to smuggle a 10 gallon "kaig" into Tennessee. Lias had a quasi-conviction that in spite of his generous gauging of the barrel a shortage might be noticed when he delivered the goods and the suspicion weighed on his mind more than the "kaig" on his shoulder. When he reached the part of the mountain trail called High Knob, the greatest elevation thereabouts, he felt so worn out by worry and fatigue that he decided to rest awhile. The beauty of the night brought comfort to Lias' soul and the softness of the turf to his bare feet. He threw down the "kaig," stretched himself on the grass and shut his eyes for "fo'ty winks."

Around High Knob there is only one thing thicker than huckleberries and moon-

Lias sat up. A great contented smile spread over his face. He drew the "kaig" a trifle nearer, put out his left foot and shook it at the retreating snake.

"Chaw away, ole man," said Lias. "Tze just as well prepared fo' you as though you'd given me six months' notice."—Harper's Magazine.

"Englishment of the turf suggests she will throw good stock and she proves a comparative failure, it is difficult to find a good reason for this failure. It may be the selection of a sire was a mistake, or that the mare had too much racing on the turf, and this in some way injured her for the stud use.

> If there is a shepherd in South Dakota who thoroughly understands his business, it is little Wilber Lathrop of Redfield. When we called there a short time ago, we found him in charge of two flocks of sheep. These he had to keep from wandering into neighboring fields, and also separate from each other. One was the lambing flock, the other the wethers, yearlings, etc.

Although we have handled sheep for 15 years, from this 12-year-old boy we learned some things about handling sheep we did not know before. Among them was how to bring in newborn lambs, have their mothers follow, ride or lead a horse at the same time and drive in two flocks of sheep. To do this he little fellow had a low box fastened apon two barrel staves, which served as dry grass, on which he laid the new omer or comers, as the case might be To this was fastened a rope 15 or 20 feet ong by which he drew the box while The poet had a hard row to hoe, and his riding the horse and directing the movewife had been hoeing it with him, and not always uncomplainingly, for she had held the mother sheep followed it closely, alhis writings in poor esteem and often urged | most imagining that their lambs were

Russia has finally invented the way to prevent horse stealing. When a man buys a horse or otherwise comes into possession of it honestly, a government certificate is made out that that individual is the rightful owner. This he must preserve as long as the animal remains in his possession. The certificate must go with the horse when it is sold and be produced on demand. When, therefore, anybody claims to own a horse and cannot show the certificate, he can be jerked before the law instantly. This plan would work well where there are only a Guard (at the World's fair)—There goes Archibald you Boom, the famous war corranchman would have some trouble get-
