A grand forward temperance movement is the abolition of army canteens by order of congress. Hereafter neither beer, wine nor any intoxicating liquors can be sold on any military reservation or army transport. The canteen claimed to be a harmless, semi-social affair, but was neither more nor less than a saloon under a disguised name. After a long struggle against it by good people in all walks of life, public sentiment demanded its discontinuance the same as the disgraceful hazing at West Point. It will be a blessing to the soldiery of our land to have the drinking temptation taken away from before them.
