WHY DO PEOPLE GO BLIND?

Forty years ago there were, in the civilized nations of the world, about 100 blind persons to whom there is one today. Aside from accident, the most universal cause of blindness is a congenital deformity of the eye.

This can only be remedied through what is called artificial refraction, a thorough knowledge of which enables the refractor to make a perfect image on the retina in spite of deformity, thus enabling a natural and continued use of the retina, giving it the proper exercise, in absence of which the eye goes blind.

Forty years ago children and young persons were not allowed to wear spectacles, hence the cause of so much blindness then and so little now. There may be two or three qualities of refraction required in a spectacle lens to make the image perfectly, and if any one of these is left out, the glasses are but little if any better than none.
