Judged by Surroundings A man's true life can nearly always be judged by his surroundings. If enter your home and find upon your parlor table a well used Bible, if I see upon the walls pure and elevating ple tures and especially in conspicuous places such religious pictures as Ra-phael's "Sistine Madonna" and Rubens' "Descent From the Cross" and Murillo's "Abraham and the Angels" or Correggio's "Penitent Magdalen;" if I see upon your library shelves among the well thumbed books such works as Thomas a Kempis' "Imitation" and Farrar's "Life of Christ" and the blographies of Livingstone and Brainerd and Gordon and a set of Parker's "Peo-ple's Bible;" if I see your music rack filled with the masterpleces of the great religious compositions, such as Handel's "Messiah" and Wagner's "Parsifal" and Flotow's "Martha" and Mendelssohn's "Ellish" or "Paul;" if I see standing in the corners of the li brary the plaster casts of such pieces of sculpture as that of Michael Ange-lo's "David" or "Moses," I am compelled to believe that some pure, noble spirit has been living in and dominat-ing that home.
