Where the Roads Are Good.

Good roads make a country cou-munity more sociable. They bring each farmer in closer contact. He dops not mind hitching up to his team at eventide and griving with his family to visit a neighbor, knowing that the roads are passable and there is no daager of running off a bridge or into a deep pool of mud. Children can be sent to school as the roads keep in good shape all winter. The rural mail carrier is never late. They get their morning papers at the same time every day, and no weather is ever so bad that the farmer cannot bitch up to a one horse wagon and drive to the vilage. These privileges are much to the countryman, who has in former years been forced to wade and drive through mud to reach town or a neighbor's

The first uniformed body of rural free delivery mail carriers in the coun try started out from the Manchester (N. H.) posteffice recently.
