THE ENGLISH BARMAID.

Movement to Stop Employment of Women in Liqueur Traffic.

The Evangelical Free church delegates at their recent meeting in Manchester discussed with animation the position and prospects in life of the barmaid. The subject was introduced by Dr. Havel Harris, a Quaker representative, who moved "that any further engagement of women as barmaids in licensed houses be made illegal." There were, he said, some occupations for which women in an enlightened community were admitted. That of the barmaid was one of them. These victims of the liquor traffic had to work long hours, and in an atmosphere vitiated morally and spiritually. Mr. Robert Whyte of London declared that girls of between fourteen and fifteen years of age were taken into this employment because they were attractive. Their personal appearance had a great deal to do with their being engaged. When they reached the age of thirty-five they were regarded as too old for the position. Their attractions had weakened, and there was no more work for them as barmaids. What became of them after they left the trade? Did they become loving wives and mothers? What would the offspring, the homes he which were provided by wives who had been accustomed to the loose talk and the immoral atmosphere that barmaids must breathe from morning to night?

It is thought that instead of barmaids being dismissed at thirty-five they might possibly be engaged at that age. Then much danger to men and women might be avoided, for it was not only the women, but also the men, who suffered as things were now going. Fellows toyed with their liquor and toyed with the barmaid. While that could not be helpful to the barmaid, he was sure it was injurious to the men.—London Telegraph.

White Hair

They know of the loss of judgment due to even slight overindulgence, and in self defense are now insisting upon total abstinence in their employments. The traveling public in particular demand that the conductor should be sober, and the merchant or manufacturer needs clear headedness in his agents. But they all have failed to realize the seriousness of the mental changes due to long continued overindulgence simply because these changes are gradually thrust upon us in the struggle for existence and are never given an opportunity to show themselves in great affairs needing well balanced judgment.

The elderly men in control of the great affairs of modern times are temperate or abstemious, as a rule, and have retained their mental vigor by reason of those habits.—American Medicine.

MAYOR A DRINK CENSOR.

Practical Temperance Campaign of Chester, Pa., Resumes.

Mayor Berry, who has undertaken to reform Chester, Pa., is finding plenty of work to do and is devoting most of his time and attention to it. Like Burgess Penypacker of West Chester, he is the most talked of official in the community.

Mayor Berry announced in police court that he was determined to put a stop to habitual drunkards appearing before him. He will notify hotel owners by letter or publish daily in the newspapers the names of the men who are to be refused drinks.

"I wish I could stop these hotel men from selling at all, for it would be a benefit to the community," said the mayor. "But there is one thing sure that I can do. I can stop them from selling to such people who come regularly before me, and I propose to do so."

Some old toppers are complaining that hotel men are already holding them up, and it is with difficulty that they can get a drink.

America's Drink Bill Growing.

The tipping habit is growing among the American people, according to figures of the bureau of statistics. The nation's drink bill has increased during the last year so that each of the 81,752,000 inhabitants is spending on an average $18.33 annually for stimulants, or $21.65 for each family of five persons, which is an equivalent of one glass of beer a day for every one of the population. The use of whiskey increased from 1.01 gallons for each person in 1896 to 1.48 gallons in 1904, and the consumption of wine in the same period shows a gain of 100 per cent.

Belgium's Decreasing Drunkenness.

L'Etouffe du Matin in commenting upon Belgium's decreasing consumption of strong drink, gives much credit to the temperance societies for the result. Especially are the abstemious unions commended, and the prediction is made that all others must finally give place to those having the stronger convictions and the courage to live up to them. The restrictive measures of 1896 are also credited with part of the happy result.

Watch the Droppings.

Healthy poultry droppings are a dark slate color, firm, hard and tipped with white. If soft, light brown, yellowish or green or white tip is absent, look out for trouble unless you change food or care. By glancing at droppings each morning serious illness can be prevented.

Keep the Yards Clean.

Remember that nothing promotes better health in the poultry yard than perfect sanitary conditions. During the hot weather scrupulous cleanliness must be maintained. The liberal use of carbolic whitewash and air slacked lime will prove highly beneficial.

Chickens Leg Weakness.

This disease, so much complained of, generally arises from the housing. No floor is better than one composed of dry earth. Neither wood, brick nor concrete is so satisfactory as mother earth for the floor of the chicken house, but it must be dry.—A. V. Meerach.

Young Mens' Clothing!

IT LOOKS GOOD AND WEARS GOOD, TOO

The quality of clothing we offer is constantly improving, this year being better than last and last year's better than the year before. But we are never satisfied; we demand continual progressive ness. Many a maker has found out to his sorrow that clothes which appeared good enough to satisfy so-called high class retailers could find no place in our very carefully selected stocks. We are very particular, but we are enthusiastic in regard to the clothing we are selling. We know the many hidden details which go to make our line of clothing the best in the country.

"One way for you to improve yourself, a young man, is to constantly associate with your superiors."

"I know it, sir, but I am so conscientious I cannot bring myself to do it."

"And why conscientious?"

"I hate to think what my superiors would be suffering all that time."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Deep Laid Plot.

Green Bone For Hens.

Professor Watson of the Pennsylvania State college says: "Poultrymen find it to their advantage to imitate the natural food of fowls and to furnish some meat food. Fowls that are given a wide range feed largely on insects and earthworms, but when they are confined it will be best to feed meat in some form. Fresh bone, if finely cut with bone cutters, makes one of the best, if not the best, of meat foods for laying hens. It is also excellent for little chickens. Care should, however, be taken not to let the bone become tainted."

Developing Winter Layers.

The poultryman who expects winter eggs from immature or stunted pullets is going to be badly disappointed. It requires good food, good care and a good steady growth from shell to maturity to develop winter layers. A little extra care and attention just now will be well repaid by the full egg basket next winter.

Poultry Pickings.

When you see a poultryman begin to get lazy and neglect his fowls, it is a sign that the end of his career as a poultryman is not far distant.

The breeder who makes the greatest progress and improvement is the one who can see the good points in the other fellow's birds as well as those in his own. Every one cannot do this.

The hen that molts early is the one that will make the best winter layer. This is a desirable trait, and such birds should be bred from and encouraged in early molting by giving them food best suited to the purpose.

It is not possible to make a rule for feeding which can be literally and persistently followed. The idea is that no fowl or lot of fowls will eat or require the same amount of food each meal.

Do not be deceived into believing that practical qualities and fancy points cannot be bred in the same bird. This is a favorite cry with some people who can't raise good ones and who want to sell their culls.—American Poultry
