Mr. Sherman promises us "revision" of the kind we have always had. A little bit higher each time.

Mr. Bryan's tariff speech perceptibly jarred the trusts, in spite of the fact that they are pretty well entrenched.

Mr. Hitchcock has opened headquarters in the Harvester building in Chicago. That won't assist the farmers in getting the harvester trust.

Miss Lola LeFollette is suing the atorial firm for failure to start her in a new play. In the meantime, her father is making a hit in all his roles.

The Statesman says that if Bryan is elected he will have a chance to pick the supreme court. Another thing the people want. If picked by Mr. Bryan the decisions rendered by said court will not always be in favor of the money power, and justice will be rendered. Republican papers cannot hold their higher courts up as examples of probity.

Now the girl goes up that if Bryan's bank guarantee proposition should be put in operation the sound banks would have to make good for the poor ones. Better that than that the people should continue to be robbed of their savings by the wildcat banks, now permitted. Which is better able to stand it, the widow who asks for a safe place to keep her mite or the opulent bank officials?

The Newberg Graphic takes malicious pleasure in reprinting a letter published in the Oregonian about our governor and commenting on it, and takes other newspapers to task for not also doing so. If the newspaper men of Oregon were to tell half of what they know regarding such escapades of prominent officials, there wouldn't be room for anything else in their papers. It would raise a stench in his own party that Mr. Graphic would not like.

William Randolph Hearst's political star has reached its zenith and is in the decadency. The erstwhile "Champion" of every cause that represented or provoked radicalism or sensationalism is doomed to political oblivion. Hearst has "flopped" and changed his political affiliations so often to further his own selfish ends that the public has ceased to pay any more attention to him. His independence league is a farce and will not be able to muster a corporal's guard during the present campaign. Hearst either fails to see the "handwriting on the wall" or is a "hair brained ass." He is a political non-entity—and cannot and will not injure the Democratic or any other party or act any following from them.—Democracy.

Following the precedent established in former campaigns the republican managers announce that they will make public the source of their campaign contributions "after the election." "It is an honor of honors to be nominated in the way Mr. Bryan was. It would seem more than coincidental that the candidate should have chosen for his place of living a town which bears the name of the great emancipator. Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

Prevalence of Kidney Disease. Most people do not realize the alarming increase and remarkable prevalence of kidney disease. While kidney disorders are the most common diseases that prevail, they are almost the last recognized by patient and physician, who expect that the disease will clear itself up without doctoring the effects, while the original disease undermines the system.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmier's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and sending pain in passing it, or had effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmier & Co., Hingham, N. Y. When writing mention this paper and don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmier's Swamp-Root, and the address, Hingham, N. Y.

Do not make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmier's Swamp-Root, and the address, Hingham, N. Y. on every bottle.

An Attorney's Coup.

(Original.) Having a case in court, I was waiting until the one on the docket was disposed of. A young girl was trying to break her father's will. He had been bedridden for some years before his death, his sister had taken care of him, and he had left her all his property on her verbal promise that she would take care of his daughter, his natural heir. It was claimed that the old man had been incompetent to make a will and that his sister had used undue influence to make him do so in her favor. At any rate, she had not properly fulfilled her promise to provide for the girl who should have inherited.

The attorney for the plaintiff was physically and mentally a splendid man; the attorney for the defendant had a bad case and resorted to pettiness. The girl from whose estate he was defending his client sat motionless, with her face toward the jury. Her countenance wore an expression of habitual sadness.

As the case proceeded the attorney opposing her case seemed to be disappointed over the effect her personality was having on the jury. There was little available evidence to prove her claim, and he had no doubt but for this personal charm that he would win his case. Finally he determined to take advantage of a statement made by his antagonist to forestall this effect.

"It's impossible," said the girl's advocate, "that my client should have seen all that was going on in that household for the reason—"

"If your client," interrupted the counsel for the defense, "would not see what was going on in that household with eyes which is now endeavoring to win the jury to her side, then no pair of eyes can see anything."

His opponent stood motionless, with his eyes fixed upon the plaintiff, while the seconds were being ticked away. He neither spoke nor gave sign that he intended to speak. The silence of the courtroom was unbroken. Judge, jury, even the clerk of the court, who had been driving a pen, looked at him fixedly. The thrust had jarred upon the nerves of the jury, and they watched intently the lips from which a defense was expected. The girl sat apparently unmoved.

non reveal any party. But whether they see good or evil, they are blessed with the power of sight. When their eyes are closed in the morning they can reveal in a beautiful world slowly opening a from the night shadows. For them the dawn reveals the plains, the valleys, the hills or the mountains. They may see the waves of ocean rolling with their green crests and white, sherry crests in upon the sands, breaking the sunshine into marbled splendor.

The speaker paused, then continued in a still more impressive tone: "But there is more, far more than this, to delight them—the forms and faces of the great joy of her life. They may look upon the features of her who, in his eyes at least, is always beautiful. The mother may see her newborn babe lying beside her and experience the first joy of her life. The young may look with recent affection on those who have forgotten them. These and myriads of other objects are the heritage of those who have been blessed with eyes.

The speaker paused, then continued in a still more impressive tone: "But what shall we say of those condemned to live in total darkness? For them nature has no pity. They may feel the pressure of a hand, but can see no smile of welcome nor the love-light dart from the eyes of those they love. They are prisoners in a dungeon."

The speaker paused again. Every eye except that of the young girl whose case was being tried was fixed upon her defender. Lives were at stake before her. Lovingly his voice almost to a whisper, her advocate added: "Gentlemen of the jury, my client is blind."

It was some time before the sounds incident to a courtroom recommenced. When they did they served for a background to the unostentatious reading by the judge of his charge to the jury. No one of the jurymen listened to it, for the mind of every one of the twelve was made up. The plaintiff had furnished the counsel for the plaintiff with a name which the latter had his mind fixed upon. The defendant's case, when the reading had been finished the foreman of the jury announced that they could come to a verdict without leaving their seats. He then announced that they had found for the plaintiff.

There was a demonstration in the courtroom which the judge was unable to check. The girl's attorney told her that there were jurors present who desired to offer congratulations. She stood up, and every person in the room passed her with a pressure of the hand.

The will was broken; she was rich. When the last person had congratulated her a double line was formed, through which, on the arm of her counsel, she walked out of the room and down to a carriage.

"That for the first time those left behind looked for the defendant's counsel. He had slipped out unnoticed."
