RUPTURE CURED

Stuart's Adhesive Plaster-Pad are self-adhesive, and hold the rupture in place without straps, buckles, or springs—cannot slip, so cannot chafe or compress against the pelvic bone. The pads contain a medicine which is kept constantly in contact and is gradually absorbed, thereby quickly curing the most obstinate cases. Hundreds have successfully treated themselves at home without hindrance from work. Guaranteed under National Pure Food & Drug Law. Write to-day and "Trial of Treatment," FREE with interesting book, will be sent. Address STUART PLASTER-PAD CO., Block 52, St. Louis, Mo.

LIFE-SIZE DOLL

Every Girl Can Have One. She is 2 1/2 feet tall and can wear all of baby's clothes. She cannot be broken, has cheeks like two pink roses, and with her big brown eyes and lips that look as if they wanted to be kissed, Miss Dolly will sit down, bend her arms and legs. She has on bright red stockings and black faced boots, and is the kind of doll your grandma used to play with. We deliver this doll to you free for only 2 yearly subscribers to THE WELCOME GUEST at 25c each. We prepay all charges. The Welcome Guest, Dept. 17, Portland, Me.

SURPRISE POCKET CAMERA

Press the button, the camera does the rest. Snap shots or time exposures. Bunches of fun. You can carry it with you in your pocket, and everybody you meet will want their picture taken. You get them to pose for you in some nice position, and tell them to look "pleasant" or "at the "birds," and to their surprise, after you press the button, they will have a picture produced, nicely mounted, 2 1/2 inches. You can make as many as they want, and that will almost make them die laughing. You can have more fun with this than any other article made. Everything carefully made and bound to work perfectly. Price complete, only 20 cents by mail, postpaid, or given for one yearly subscription at 25 cents. Address THE WELCOME GUEST, Dept. 17, PORTLAND, ME.

"Peril and the Prize"

into line, he'll show his pictures to you. Nothing slow about them, I tell you." "So he had sent those pictures to the garret?" I asked, indicating with a sweep those on the wall. "Yes, and lots others. They were too slow for his taste. He's a real sport, he is. When I was fixin' up this room for you I brought down the Bible. I always do claim that every respectable house ought to have a Bible in it." "I suppose you are a great Bible-reader?" I said. "Indeed I be," she responded promptly. "I suppose you find plenty of warrant there for your present life," I said. "There hasn't been any warrant for me in ten years," she answered. "You didn't understand me. I say you find plenty of support for the business you now follow?" "Oh, yes! I can support myself as cook an' housekeeper any time. It's lots safer, too." I gave it up, realizing that her point of view was not mine, and that dull people cannot be led into interesting colloquy. When she was gone I pounced upon the Bible in feverish haste. I was disappointed when I turned to the family record, for its pages had been torn out. There were four pages devoted to photographs, however, and here, though nearly all were missing, there was one full-length of Mr. Dean. A mark in red ink had been drawn across the throat, a cross had been placed above the heart and beneath had been written the word "Traitor." This puerile exhibition of hatred had never been the work of the man I had seen that day, but of some weaker and less intelligent member of the criminal band. Of that I felt assured. But that Lucy's father had been a member of a gang of lawbreakers and had incurred their murderous hatred seemed clearly indicated, monstrous as the idea appeared. I began turning through the great book, leaf by leaf, searching for some scrap of paper which would give me some future light. At last I came upon a thin sheet without signature on which I read these words: "Have made investment as requested. Keep me constantly advised as to address. Use telegraph only. Have tipped the police as to G., but expect nothing, as usual." That was all. There was neither date, signature nor address. But the writing was that of my employer, Mr. Whitwood. At the bottom was written: "Dear papa, F. brought this for you this morning. L." A little more was clear to me. For profit or for vengeance, probably for both, the criminals wanted the address of Mr. Dean. They would find it in the safe of Mr. Whitwood. They were going to try to force me to yield up a secret which would mean disaster, possibly death, for the father of Lucy Dean. More, I knew Mr. Whitwood was the very soul of honor and the man with whom he was dealing was not a criminal, however unfortunately he might be placed. My position was full of peril. I would die before I would say one word which would bring grief to the girl I loved. If I escaped that peril, I would myself gain her address and seek the great prize of her love. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

"Thirty-one Presidential Elections"

Democrats would nominate General U. S. Grant, who was a member of their party, but they were outwitted by their opponents, who, fearing the popularity of the successful leader of the army, held an earlier convention and nominated him themselves. As this gave him a certainty of election he would have possessed more than ordinary human nature had he refused. He had 214 votes to eighty for the Democratic candidate, Horatio Seymour of New York. For Vice-President Schuyler Colfax was chosen over F. P. Blair. In 1872 the Republican party being seriously divided on the question of the harsh measures adopted toward the Southern States, the dissatisfied leaders nominated Horace Greeley and B. Gratz Brown, and these were endorsed by the Democrats. The Republicans renominated Grant, with Henry Wilson as Vice-President. The electoral vote was 286 to 80, but Greeley having died before the meeting of the electors the Democratic vote was scattered according to individual fancy, forty-two votes being cast for Thomas A. Hendricks. In 1876 occurred the first disputed Presidential election. The Democratic candidates were Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks, the Republican, R. B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler. There were disputed returns in several States, and the House of Representatives being Democratic and the Senate Republican, it was agreed to refer the matter to a committee composed of fifteen members chosen from the two houses and the Supreme Court. The returns from Florida choosing the Republican electors were pronounced fraudulent by the Republican Supreme Court of that State and the Tilden electors declared elected. The commission, however, by a party vote of eight to seven, declared that the Hayes returns being first received were bound to be counted and that they "could not go behind the returns." So Hayes and Wheeler were declared elected by 185 to 184. In 1880 the Republicans nominated James A. Garfield and Chester A. Arthur; the Democrats, General Winfield S. Hancock and William H. English. The vote was 214 to 155. Garfield fell by an assassin's hand and Arthur became President in September following the inauguration. In 1884 the features of the campaign were, a revolt in the Republican party which carried many of its leaders and newspapers out of the ranks. Cleveland carried the State of New York by a narrow plurality and was elected by an electoral vote of 219 to 182. For Vice-President Thomas A. Hendricks was elected over General John A. Logan. In 1888 President Cleveland was renominated by the Democrats, with Allen G. Thurman as Vice-President. The Republicans named General Benjamin Harrison and Levi P. Morton, who were elected by 233 to 168.
