

PINKIE PRIM

Her Mama's purse lies open.
She takes a little peek.
Inside is one loose penny—
(She doesn't mean to sneak.)

ment address for nearly six weeks, such a lively pace that the mail men't keep up with me. At one I had mail scattered over about states and territories, but am get- it all gathered in now.
am now undergoing a surgical course one of the best ear and throat lalists in Southern California. The ment is necessarily progressing ly, as the work is of a severe and ate nature, but I have great hopes successful result. I believe it is go- to be possible to restore my hearing od shape, but, of course, I shall etter about it after the treatment rogressed a little farther.
ear good reports of the condition ess in Oregon, and I take it for ed that the Dallas printers are eng their share of the prosperity. I heard of a printer buying govern- bonds or endorsing a library, so if oys are making a living and lay- a few dollars for the proverbial day, you ought to be satisfied.
not know just when I shall return gon. Tell the boys (and also the that I often think of them all, and hope to be at home again at no- stand day. Have enjoyed perfect and have seen quite a consid- eration of God's footstool since s Dallas last summer. The vaca- as been most pleasant and profit- but I shall be glad to get home to the working harness again, best regards to yourself and fam- am,
Truly yours,
J. C. HAYTER.

She offers one to Pinkie,
Who asks her where she got
The money for the "lickrish."
She pouts, and answers not.

And then she bursts out crying;
And says, "From Mama's purse."
"That's pretty bad," says Pinkie.
"But, still it might be worse."
