STOVER GASOLINE ENGINE, Always in Stock.

The Stover Engine is a four cycle, hit and miss type. The governor being connected to the fly-wheel of engine, requires no gears or belt. The governor automatically regulates the supply of gasoline and the arrangement of the governor in the wheel is so that it is not connected with a catch which operates direct on the exhaust valve, holding same in an open position and not allowing the engine to feed gasoline when the speed of the engine increases above normal. By the action of the governor in opening the exhaust valve the compression in the cylinder is entirely released, freeing the engine from friction and resistance which would otherwise be caused if this compression was not released. This operation is a delicate one and must be performed at the proper time in order to get the most power out of an engine. Bearings are extra long and lined with the best high speed metal, designed for severe service. All side box bearing commonly called pillow blocks are adjustable in all sizes of engines from 2 to 40-horse, which is not the case in many so-called high grade engines.

In the Stover Engine the gasoline is admitted direct into the cylinder with the required amount of air necessary to form a perfect combustible mixture and as the mixture is admitted without the use of auxilliary valves or chambers, it lessens complications in the manufacture of the engine and the manner in which the mixture is admitted also has been proved to give better results, that is, great power with small fuel consumption. All sizes of engines are operated at a slow speed. We could increase the advertised power by increasing the speed, but the high speed used by other manufacturers is not calculated to increase the durability of the engine. Slow speed gasoline engines will develope more power on the same amount of gasoline for the reason that it allows the cylinder to hold the charge longer after it has exploded, or in other words, permits of greater expansion. High-speed gasoline engines, as used in launches and automobiles, consume a great deal more gasoline, developing same horse power, than do the Stover engines.
