Lightning's Queer Freaks.

Dallas was visited by lightning yesterday morning for the first time, and it performed a couple of queer freaks. A bolt struck the office of the water company near the depot, knocked out the door of the telephone and strewn things around a bit, but did not injure the phone itself, nor any on that party line. Just back of the Star house it hit a line of telephone wire, and for some 20 feet eat out the wire, leaving the installation enclosing it as complete as when it was first put up. In the block by the depot it burned out, the electric transformer and the residents of that section had no lights for a time. Mr. Griffith, the hardware drummer, started from Tillamook City that morning, reaching Dallas in the afternoon, and says he encountered with his auto the worst storm he ever got into in Oregon. Lightning struck a tree and made kindling wood of it not 50 feet from him, and he went through one of the worst rain storms he cares to meet. No other damage in Folk has been reported. 11

WORK CARD GAME.

Bernard Friesen Bites at Antiquated Electric Belt Scheme.

As usual, the show that visited Dallas yesterday brought with them a bunch of dips, short change artists and confidence men, ready and willing to skin any gullible man of money that they could lay their hands upon. The short changers got in their work in several instances, probably making sufficient to consider it a very good day for their business, but we have not heard of any one that got their pockets picked, the crowd not being thick enough in any one place for them to get in their work in good shape. Those who were bit at these things generally desired no publicity, and when they find they have been worked simply stand the loss and keep their mouths shut. This, we understand, is the case with one man who got filimamed for several hundred dollars, but as he has chosen to not reveal his personality, publicity cannot be given the matter. 11

It devolved on Mr. Bernard Friesen to get the worst touched of all, and although he promised to keep the transaction a secret between himself and the management in view of the return to him of a portion of his wealth, the occurrence was the most talked of of anything on the streets today, and the Itemizer sees no reason for keeping it from the public, hoping that it may in some other town in Oregon visited by the aggregation tend to keep others from letting their hard earned money take wings, and fly away. The occurrences of the day to Mr. Friesen, are as follows, as near as we can gather them from the victim and Sheriff Grant: Just before noon a stranger met Mr. Friesen on the street and engaged him in conversation regarding the price of land, leaning of money, interest thereon, and the other necessary talk to find out that Mr. Friesen had $1500 idle money in the bank. As soon as the stranger found this out, he gave the high sign to his confederates, and one of them came up and proposed to the stranger the advantages of an electric belt, which was shown, and another stranger came up and took part in the talk, none of which was aimed at Mr. Friesen, but among the other men, all claiming to be strangers to each other, but who listened with avidity to the proposition of the second man as to the good money that could be made out of the belt. 11

Mr. Friesen was of course soon drawn into the talk, and after while it was agreed that three of them enter into the proposition each to put up $1500. Mr. Friesen was advised to get his money from the bank, as no checks, for good and sufficient reasons, could be admitted into the proposition. He went to the Dallas City bank and drew out the $1500. Cashier Vassall and the Craven boys advised him against carrying away the money, and to use a check instead, but the idea had thoroughly stuck into Bernard's mind that he was going to make $1500 on the deal, and he met the men on the street and went to the circus ground, where the slick part of the business was conducted and his money vanished. This was done by the old game of three cards, one black and two white. He was to draw and decide whether he made $1500 or lost, and of course he lost. 11

After a few hours the heart broken old man found Sheriff Grant and enlisted his services and that of Deputy Prosecuting Attorney Sibley in the matter. The sheriff went to the grounds and interviewed the management who of course disavowed all knowledge of the transaction, but all came down for a confab at Mr. Sibley's office, and the upshot of the matter was that in order to keep the affair quiet they at last agreed to give Mr. Friesen $400, as the theft was committed on their grounds, and they did not want any hard feelings or advertisement on account of the matter. 11

What the Itemizer cannot see through in the whole matter, is where the management allowed any liability at all, they could not be made by law to disgorge all the money. This is certainly a regrettable instance, and it is nearly a certainty that if the show had stayed here until our people had learned of and digested the whole affair, the citizens would have taken the matter in their own hands, went to the grounds and saw to it that the money was refunded or else wreaked summary vengeance. This is the first time such an episode has occurred within our city, and it seems hardly understandable, with all the publicity constantly being given to such transactions that there should be a man, woman or child in our midst that would bite at con games. 11

NCW AN S. P. LINE.

The Salem, Falls City & Western
Now a Road of the Past.

The Salem, Falls City & Western has long been considered as owned by the Southern Pacific railroad, but until recently this ownership has been denied, and nothing been done in the open as afflicting them with the road. Some months ago Mr. Hinshaw relieved Lou Gerlinger as manager and this was the first direct intimation the company ever made that the road ever belonged to them, although it is probable that the bonds of the road have always been held through this company. Now comes an order from the highups that the separate office here is to be discontinued and Mr. Hinshaw relieved. He has always since leaving the ticket office at Hillsboro been detailed on separate assignments and he does not know where will be his next location. Mr. Hinshaw has proven a faithful manager for the company, and has made many friends here who will greatly regret his departure to other fields. He is a most courteous and obliging gentleman, himself and family taking important part in our business and social life. 11

Records are now being packed for shipment, and he thinks that within a week he will be away and know where he is to be stationed in the future. The business of the office is now being conducted from the regular S. P. office, same as any of their other roads. 11

Mr. S. T. Jones will remain here as train dispatcher, and Mr. Manson will retain his position as road master, with his duties considerably increased. Miss Brown goes to the auditor's office in Portland, where she will have charge of the accounts of this portion of the road. Mr. McCormick has already departed for Albany, where he will be engaged in the same line of work. 11

The passing of the old office marks a change for Dallas in many respects, some of which are regrettable, as we have all heretofore held a personal interest in the road, backing it as we did on the start with our money. Now it is in the hands of a great corporation, and the familiar relation is a thing of the past. 11
