Woman's World

Leader of the New Woman's Educational Movement In the Orient.

DR. MARY MILLS PATRICK.

The most remarkable woman's college in the world is Constantinople college, where women from all parts of the orient are sent to be grounded in the arts and sciences of the occident. Forty years ago the small school which was the beginning of the college was established in Constantinople. It was a missionary enterprise, and in those days the orient looked with suspicion on the occident and with disapproval on anything like the higher education of women. All this is changed, however. The sultan has set the seal of his approval on the school and recommends the education of Turkish young women, while from Armenia, the Balkan states, Greece and the farther orient girls of the best families are sent to enjoy the educational advantages of an institution which is as well equipped as the average American woman's college. Many rich Americans have contributed generously for improvements, the total cost of the college buildings and equipment being about three-quarters of a million dollars. Recently five splendid new buildings were dedicated.

The head of this college is Dr. Mary Mills Patrick, an American, to whom are due the high standard and the success of the institution. She was born at Canterbury, N. H. From New England she removed to the state of Iowa with her parents, residing during her school years at Lyons and there being graduated from Lyons college.

Soon after her graduation she went to Turkey under appointment received from the American board of foreign missions and first spent several years in the eastern part of Asia Minor, where her work was chiefly among the Armenian people.

Here she acquired a knowledge of the Armenian language that marked her from the beginning of her career as gifted especially in linguistic faculty. Besides the Armenian, she speaks fluently Turkish, Greek, Bulgarian, French and German.

After several years' residence in the Armenian provinces Miss Patrick was called to the American school for girls at Constantinople, to which institution she has devoted more than thirty years of untiring effort, establishing there a standard for the education of girls that has changed the entire attitude of the various races of the near east and the ideas of the Ottoman government as well on this most important subject. From a high school, established in 1871, this American institution for the higher education of young women has grown under the able direction of Dr. Patrick into the strong and well equipped college, the only college for girls in the Ottoman empire. Seeing the need of such a college in Constantinople, which draws to itself people from all parts of the entire Levant, even influencing the thought and life of Persia and Arabia, Egypt and southern Russia, as well as the whole of the southeast of Europe, Miss Patrick early determined to work for the establishment of a permanent educational work of high standard. Spending all her vacations in study and research work, taking courses successively at the universities of Heidelberg, Zurich, Leipzig, Berlin and Berne, she finally took the doctor's degree from the last named institution, her major work being in the field of Greek philosophy. She has done notable work in psychology also and in ethics, as well as in Greek literature and history. In 1890 the school over which she had for nearly ten years presided was incorporated into a college, and it is due to the splendid efforts of Dr. Patrick that this institution is now established in its beautiful new home on the European shores of the Bosporus, the center of intellectual life for the women of the near east.

The Cane Umbrella.

Perhaps in the course of your shopping or walking tour you have noticed a smart woman with a long cane. And then perhaps you have been surprised when rain began to fall to see the some smart woman open the top of her cane and draw out an umbrella. As if it were not enough for women to carry canes without carrying these surprising long staffs that turn out to be umbrellas and canes combined!

The Incroyable costumes and fashions have brought about the carrying of canes by women. And the really smart woman who is in search of something new chooses the umbrella sheathed in a canelike case of wood.

NEEDLECRAFT.

The latest bath slippers are of white Turkish toweling. They are embroidered in blue in a French knot design.

Long, pointed bags of white ratine show a design of blue French knots. Women can easily embroider one of these.

The dainty Mosaic embroidery is still popular. Its airiness and its pretty colorings as well as by the ease with which it may be worked recommend it to women.

Fillet lace is the thing nowadays. Baby Irish may be bought for a song, but fillet is growing gradually more expensive every day. Even the tiniest medallion of it makes a gown, while for the table it is being much sought after by women with long purses.
