Tournament Day.

The noon sun of tournament day shone brilliantly over the village, drowsy no longer, for many vehicles were hitched at the curb, or moved leisurely along the leafy street: big, canvas-topped country wagons drawn by shaggy-hoofed horses and set with chairs that bumped and jostled their holiday loads from outlying tobacco plantation and stud farm; sober, black covered buggles, long, narrow, springless busckboards, frivolous side-bar runabouts and antique shays resurrected from the primeval depths of cobwebbed stables, relics of tarnished grandeur and faded fortune. Here and thre a motor crept, a bilious and replete beetle among insects of wider wing. Knots of high-booted men conversed on the street corners, men handcuffed, it would seem, to their whips; and through all sifted a varicolored stream of negroes, male and depends group netword and volumble. colored stream of negroes, male and female, good natured and voluable. For tournament day was a county event, and the annual sport of the quality had long outstripped even cirtus day in general popularity.
