"THE VALIANTS OF VIRGINIA"

BY HALLIE ERMINE RIVES. Copyright, 1912, The Bobbs-Merrill Co. (Continued from last week.) CHAPTER XXXVI. By the Sun-Dial.

Eyes arched with fan-shielded whispers, and fair faces, foreshortened as they turned back over powder-white shoulders, followed their swallowlike movement. From an ever-widening circle of masculine devotees Katharine Fargo watched them with a smile that cloaked an increasing and nwelcome question Katharine had never looked more handsome; a critical survey of her mirror at Gladden Hall had assured her of that. Never had her poise been more superb, her toilet more enrap-turing. She was exquisitely gowned in rose-colored mousseline-de-sole, em-broidered in tiny brilliants laid on in Greek patterns. From her neck, in a single splendid loop of irridescence against the rosy mist, depended those fabulous pearls-"the kind you simply can't believe," as Betty Page confide to her partner-on whose newspaper reproduction (actual diameter) metro politan shop-girls had been wont to gaze with glistening eyes; and within their milky circlet, on her rounded breast, trembled three pale gold-veined

Watching that quadrille through her drooping emerald-tinted eyes, she received a sudden enlighting impressions of Shirley's flawless beauty. At the tournament her fleeting glimpsehad adjudged her merely sweetly pretty. The Chambers' surrey had stopped en route for Shirley, but in her wraps and veil she had then been all but invisible. This had been Katharine's first adequate view, and the sight of her radiant charm had the effect almost of a blow.

For Katharine, be it said, had whol ly surrendered to the old, yet new, attraction that had swept her on the tourney field. This feeling was n less cerebral and intellectual than had been: she was no Galatea waitin her Pygmalion. But it was strong for all that. And what had lain always in the back of her mind as a half-formed intention, had become a self-admitted purpose during the motor ride. So as she watched them waltz, seasoned artificalist as she was, Katharine for a breath had had need of all ner address to keep the ball of conversation sparkingly a-roll. Her natural assurance, how ever, came quickly to her ald. She had been an acknowledged beauty too many seasons-had known John Val-iant, or believed she had, too long and well-to allow the swift keen edge of trepidation that had touched her to cool into prescience. In another moment the waltz fainted out, to be succeeded by a deuxtemps, and presently the host, in his crimson cloak, was doffing his plumed hat before her. Circling the polished hat before her. Circuing the poinshed floor in the maze, there was something gratefully like former days in the assured touch, the true and ready guidance. The intrusive question faded. He was the John Valiant she had always known, of flashing repar-tee and graceful compliment, yet with a touch of dignity, too—as befitted the bim. After a decorous dozen of frounds, she took his arm and allowed her perfect figure to be conducted through the various rooms of the ground floor, chatting in quite the old.
