> THE PORT TOWNSEND ROW. History of the Fight Against Bradshaw

PORT TOWNSEND, Feb. 2-The difficulty here is nothing more or less than a row in the ranks of the Republican party, while dressing for dinner, it was said and the triumphant wing is now simply that she had succumbed to aneurism of crushing its opponent with evidence and The young countess, who was a great story of the difficulty dates back several favorite in Viennese society, had just years. In the first place, the appoint-celebrated her 26th birthday. Her marning to the young Count Waldstein of Collector was made against the wishes suddenly at Vienna the other day his death was attributed to his despair at losing his charming and beloved wife.

Great was the astonishment, however, when it was found that he had bequeathed all his money and mentailed estates to the charitable institutions of the city of Vienna, instead of leaving his possessions to his relatives.

His opponents were church people, however, who, it is claimed, urged his mare of living against him. They said he was fast and not fit or the position. His nomination was a political accident. No one wanted the place. The older lawyers saw more in their practice than the office paid and refused it, and it was possessions to his relatives. Another peculiar circumstance was that his land steward, an ex-hussar than anything else. The large number that his land steward, an ex-hussar officer, who had been his most intimate friend, and who had found refuge in his house when the loss of his fortune left him almost penniless, died about 10 days before Count Waldstein.

A few days ago it became known through the indiscretion of the count's valet, that the Countess Waldstein had carried on an intrigue with a young baron, who was exceedingly handsome.

A PROTECTION VICTORY.

How the Government Carried the Spanish Elections. London, Feb. 3-A dispatch from Seville says the clergy took an active share in the election, arging voters to the polls and to bring out to them how they should vote. In numerous instances the lower classes who could not read had recourse to the priests for directions as to what they should do. The clergy are without exception on the Conservative side and strongly opposed to the Liberals, whom many of the peasantry regard as Atheists in the ranks of the Republican party, and the triumphant wing is now simply crushing its opponent with evidence and circumstances furnished by itself. The story of the difficulty dates back several years. In the first place, the appointwas to send policemen to accompany: batch of voters and see that they voted right. The court is said to be highly gratified with the result of the election. one effect of the spanish election will be to silence the free trade party, which has been protesting against the tariff enacted by the existing ministry, whose course is now endorsed by a large majority of electors.

Pawned His Crown. Paris, Feb. 2-The adventures of Tar tarin de Tarascon, which have been so amusingly described by Alphonse Daudet, are a striking counterpart of the romantic existence of M. de Mayrens. otherwise Marie I., king of the Sedangs. who has just died in his palace on the island of To-Man. This outlandist majesty, by birth a Frenchman, was cer ainly a man very much out of the comnon and resembled this great Tartarian in more ways than one.

M. de Mayrens was once a well-known Paris club man, but, having got rapidly through his fortune, he retired to a little ouse which he possessed near Honilies, in the department of Feine et Oise, a ew miles from Paris, and was soon for ew miles from Paris, and was soon forgotten. Bored to death by the monotony of country life, he was suddenly seized with a spirit of adventure, and packing his trunk, he started for the farEast without move ado. There he visied several semi-savage tribes, and, after roaming around for a space of eight grouths, finally settled down in Indo-

China, among the Sedangs who con-china among the Sedangs who con-sented to proclaim him king.

The new king called himself Marie I., and made up his court in a manner in striking contrast with those of all his orother sovereigns, in so far that posts of honor granted by Marce I, had to be add or by the recipients thereof, inhaid or by the recipients thereof, in-lead of receiving a salary from the rown. Ministers, chamberlains, equer-ries and the other dignifaries had to pay heir monarch a subsidy, and a pretty leavy one at that, for the privilege of erving him. The officials condition this, however, and gave the king the cold shoulder. Thoroughly disgusted Marie I, shook the dust of his adopted land from his sandals and departed in and from his sanda's and departed in solenn grandeur for Ostrand, leaving behind him his once brilliant court. There he met with well deserved success, and his adventures in Beig um completely threw into the shade the most fantastic of Levceq's or Suppe's conic operas. His dupe's were innumerable, for Marie I., so far from being an ordinary adventurer, was a man of ordinary adventurer, was a man of great taient and prepossessing appear-ance, and could, when he chose, be exseedingly winning and persuasive.

In a week he had rim up a tremen
lous bill at the best hotel of Ostend.
Unable to settle it, he left in the hands of the unsusie ting bon face his royal grown, carefully sealed up in a silver asket, engraved with the arms of Sedang. It was not until several weeks ifter the king's departure that the worthy be gian was surprised and made curious, and not hearing from his high and mighty patron, ventured to open the valuable parcel. His horror may be im-agined when he found it contained a ew france. In the meanwhile the enterprising monarch had been in Brussell, where he had succeeded in so comp t by convinsome of the existence of his superb kingdom beyond the sea, that this simhim the sum of 40,000 francs for the purpose of helping him to create a new field of commerce, in which he was to neid of commerce, in which he was to have the important share. Several Belgian officers, won over by M. Somze to the cause of Mar e L. constituted themselves a commission of explorers and started at once with the severeign of the Sedangs for Indo-China. On the way to singapore the king conducted himself. Senangs for the kinz conducted himself in so unbecomin a fashion that the Belgian officers who had so joyansly embarked on the expedition lost all their illusion and went so far as to openly parrel with their here and finally left. Marie I, lived high in Singapore a few weeks, and deceived two Frenchmen into accompanying him home. On landing there M. Villeroy and M. Scott imme-iately saw how far they had been deceived, and a tremendous quarrel to k deceived, and a tremendous quarrel to k place between them and the king. The next morning M. Villerov was foundlead in his tent, and M. Scott, who harely escaped with his life, returned to Singapore, where he charged his majesty, King Marie I., with poisoning M. Villeroy. He declared that this imputent monarch always carried deadly posson on his person, and was in the habit of exacting obscience by threatening to use it on them should they prove obdurate to his commands. Steps were about to be taken for the arrest of the stream of the correspondence of the correspon about to be taken for the arrest of the alleged criminal, when news was received that he also had been found dead in his palatial but.
