pests if we have patience and can afford to wait. But can we? Most certainly not, if we can do better, and we can. The destructive San Tose scale is another example. It was introduced several years ago. It announced itself: Neither trees nor fruit will you have faults may be. In spreading, and ruining orchards it was a terror. The fruit growers of the state were all up in arms against it. Hundreds of sprays and washes were invented, concocted and used against it but the scale marched serenely on. Some checked it somewhat, making it possible to grow some fruit. But not one of the many things used could eradicate it. It is still a serious question. Among economic entomologists, many believe it would have disappeared much sooner if it had been left entirely alone. It is now disappearing very fast, being exterminated by a little gnat. It is being destroyed most rapidly in old settled places, where no spraying has been done and where only two or three years ago they covered everything. So they would all go could we find and scatter among them their most effective natural enemies to be found among other insects. But can we find and in-There is another point which must be kept in mind. Any cause that weakens vigor or vitality in a life renders that life more susceptible to chronic diseases. This is especially so in vegetable life. Scale bugs, leaflice, root lice and leaf feeding insccis all weaken the tree they prey upon. Therefore, since our fruit is absolute proof that a thoroughly sound, healthy, vigorous tree is quite re-with lice and the first to die with roup or cholera. The man of low vitality dies first in epidemics and succumbs more quickly to malignant diseases. drains the insects make on them. We can do both nearly nerfectiv. How, will election.
