THE BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION.

Erastus Norman, in a recent address, has the following to say of Building and Loan Associations:

"It does not become this occasion to discuss the political problems that environ the breadwinner in the struggle for life for himself and for those whom he loves But there is a tax heavier than all other taxes that he can himself obliterate. It is not a political tax; it is a purely economic tax. The heaviest of his burdens is his rent. Rent absorbs one-third of the winnings of the working man in the only race he can run. Is it possible to lay this burden down? Those who have studied the subject marvel that some one has not arisen with a plan by which the universality of rent could be obliterated, yet no philosopher, no philanthropist, no great financier, has attempted the task. Nevertheless, there has been a movement, and a vast and glorious movement, in this direction, in this country. It is known as the Building Loan Association—association making loans to encourage building. The association is a creation of the working man, one that is authorized by a most liberal law of each of the states, into the treasury of which is poured not only the rental, but the savings of its members With this accumulation of funds a purchase of homes is possible, which, by gradual payment, become the property of the members In Philadelphia alone, last year, ten thousand houses were built by these associations. In Reading, Rochester, in all the Western cities, even in Brooklyn and on Staten Island, the movement has assumed great importance

So large has this business now become that the capital employed in building loan associations exceeds the capital of the entire National banking system amounting to over seven hundred millions of dollars. In all the range of economic questions, there is nothing more interesting, more helpful or more hopeful for the country than this movement for the acquirement of homes. Economic questions like trusts and combinations like the disappearance of competition like the organization of capital in great transportation agencies, like co operative movements all over the country, are full of significance to the workingman. But all these questions put together do not assume as importance so great, so far reaching and so beneficial, as that involved in the building loan association movement.

THE PEOPLE ON COLUMBUS DAY

Preparations are being made all over the United States by the public schools to celebrate Columbus Day, Oct. 21. It is likely to be the most general of any of the centennials through which we have passed. There is no doubt that the American people, as a whole, have become thoroughly interested in the significance of this 400th anniversary.

One strong reason for this wide interest is the public school leadership of the national celebration. As soon as this school leadership was proposed, the press of the country began to comment the idea. It was received favorably by the superintendents of education, teachers and thoughtful citizens generally.

So it came about that the idea proved acceptable to everybody. Then it was further promoted by the official recognitions it received. The National Educational Association adopted it, and appointed all the state superintendents a committee to carry it out; and a special committee with headquarters at the Youth's Companion office, Boston, to push the movement and prepare a uniform official program for use in every locality. Commander-in-chief Palmer, of the Grand Army, saw the opportunity the plan offered, and issued general orders that all the G. A. R. posts in the country link themselves with the schools in a grand patriotic, unpartisan demonstration on Columbus Day—assisting the schools to raise and salute the flag, and escorting them to the review.

THE E. O. advocates that the only way to beat the republicans in the state of Oregon is to fuse with the people's party. If the contest has narrowed down to the point of "anything to win," this is about the right thing. But the advocate of a party that is supposed to have principles as old as Jefferson, and honest as Jackson, should not drop down to such a plane. It shows too plainly that bilimania has reached Oregon, and that there are a few who are willing to do anything to beat the republicans. Principles should not be made subservient to mere partisan holding of office, and any party, it matters not which one, that stoops to coalition merely for the sake of defeating our party and beating the other, and for selfish ends, should remain in defeat for ever. Jefferson and Jackson never advocated such a plan; in fact were above anything of that kind, so we must conclude that honest followers of these statesmen are few and far between.

PEOPLE who are not patrons of a paper can not consistently ask for space; if they can make the demand without blushing, without feeling that they are asking for the property, the space that makes an editor his living, they have gall enough for an army of politicians. But when such a request is made and granted, and the editor gets kicked for his kindness, it is time to draw the line. We have space for our friends, regardless of politics, religion, or previous condition of servitude, but not a line for the man who asks for the earth, gets it, and then kicks because you can't throw in the moon too.

IT is safe to say that just at present there is more interest centered in tomorrow's fight at New Orleans, than in the presidential canvass. People who pronounce it as brutal, are anxious to learn the result, and will read full telegraphic reports of the same. The Christian papers will this week denounce such an affair, style it as inhuman, barbarous and criminal, and next week these same papers will come out with a brief report of same. Of course they will probably not report it by rounds, but they can not overlook it as a matter of news, for even they know that their papers are to day perused by those who are interested in the result. After all we Americans are a curious set of people, never satisfied until we know all, even though we don't like to hear of it.

Morrow county's G. A. R. post, of Lexington, will hold a campfire in Heppner Oct. 21, to which every post in Eastern Oregon will be invited. This will be an interesting event for Heppner as it will bring together many old soldiers. The day selected is also the day of the public school's celebration of Columbus Day. Such being the case they can join with the school, assist them in their program, especially raising and saluting the American flag, thus making both demonstrations grand, unpartisan and patriotic.

PORTLAND has been visited by another fire. This time the entire block bounded by Sixth and Hoyt, Fifth and Irving, was burned. This block was the property of C. H. Dodd; his large warehouse was also numbered among the buildings burned. The loss will likely exceed $100,000, with insurance covering half that amount.

THE artesian well which is now being sunk at Athena, is down 165 feet, the water rising to within seven feet of the surface. It will be sunk to a depth of 200 feet, when, if sufficient water is not obtained, another effort will be made at another location.

AS IT is now a settled fact that a sufficient amount of water can be had here for the water works, active operations will at once begin. The electric light plant will be completed in less than two months.

THE occultation of Mars by the moon, between 9 and 10 o'clock Saturday night, was an interesting sight to many

COLUMBUS DAY will be appropriately celebrated in Heppner by the public schools.

Nancy Hanks Lowers Her Record on The Kite Track to 2:09 1-4.

INDEPENDENCE, Ia., Aug. 31.—Nancy Hanks, the queen of horsedom added a shining star to her crown today, when she trotted the world famous kite track at this place in the unprecedented time of 2:09¼, clipping two seconds off her Chicago mark, made two weeks ago. She was brought out at 2:30 and as soon as she was recognized in the lot the cheering began. She looked well, and her superior condition today was easily discernible. She took her first warming up mile gently, being only driven at a jog. About 4 o'clock she was brought out again and was received with the same cordial welcome. At just 4:15 they appeared on the stretch again. This time the applause was deafening, handkerchiefs and parasols waved, voices expanded to their utmost, and young and old and everybody cheered. She was now jogged up the lane and turned to face the kite before her. The attempt was countless, and she came back and scored down again. Frank Starr had the ribbons, Abe Lincoln, near her, while Williams, with Ned Cotton was waiting at the post. When she reached the wire she was going square and true, and Doble nodded for the word. From the word "go" Nancy reeled as only Nancy can trot, as steady as clockwork and swifter than a bird, with her matchless swinging gait.

She reached the quarter-pole in 30 seconds. "Too fast," was the verdict of the crowd, and this was accepted by all as safe. The half was covered in 1:01, and as men who watched the fighter on the trials found it hard to believe. The three quarter flag went down at 1:34, and fearing she was lagging, Williams passed up with the runner Ned Cotton. The act was useless. Doble leaned her head and urged her on gently with the whip and voice. As she darted under the wire there was breathless silence. Watches were consulted, and ranged all the way from 2:06 down. Cheers of enthusiasm were sent up as the great horse was driven back to the stand, but a hush fell over all as the bell was tapped. Starter Ace Carroy announced the official time of 2:09¼, and his voice was drowned with yells. The grooms gave the mare loving caresses as they adjusted the blankets, and many willing hands were only too anxious to touch the queen of the turf to assist in arranging her robes. Later Doble expressed himself as confident that the kite shaped tracks were faster than those of the regulation shape, but just how much he would not like to say.
