Increase of Bees by Dividing. On the subject of increase by dividing Root tells us in Gleanings in Bee Cul ture, for the benefit of amateurs, that there is much danger in spreading brood Many times we have cold nights and r, at days, even after we think the weather is settled for warm. The result is the brood is killed and the colony is set back. As a general thing it is best for beginners to let nature take its own wirse. He says: We prefer to divide in this way: Put KANSAS CITY, St. Paul, IF DELIVERED IN HEFFNER, WILL ADD the queen, one-third of the brood and two-thirds of the bees on the new stand A large part of the bees, not used to the new stand, will return to the old one The consequence will be that each stand will have about an equal division of bees. The new stand will have onethird the brood, but it has the queen and therefore the power to go right on with brood rearing, while the old stand with two-thirds of the brood, will have to wait until they can raise a queen. ## DEVOTED TO SPIDERS.

A Lifetime Spent in Collecting and Study

"One of the curious things of this life," remarked an ex-congressman to a Pittsburgh Dispatch man, "is the devotion of some men to an idea without regard to the opinion of the rest of the world and without hope of reward. I know of a man from my state who has devoted a lifetime to spiders. He died in the Alps, where he had been for two years collecting specimens of spiders. He sacrificed his life to spiders. He has left a collection of some twenty eight thousand distinct varieties. You would hardly think there were many more spiders in existence. This man had them stuck up in sections, it classes, fully labelled.
