A STRANGE DUEL.

Fought in the Parlor of a Physician's Home.

The Man of Medicine Emerges in a Deadly Battle with a Soldier During the Absence of His Family.

There is a gentleman in Milwaukee who tells a story that savors more of the days of George III than of the practical nineteenth century. His name cannot be given, says the Chicago Times, but were it known his tale, romantic as it is, would be accepted without question, as he is well known and respected. Early in August, he said, two residents of Chicago met in a club. They were Dr. Lee, formerly of the United States army, and Lieut. Fairchild, who still wears army blue. During the evening they quarreled. What brought on the quarrel he does not know. It might have been a dispute over a trifling matter that developed into something worse, or it might have been a difference over a social game of cards. The next day Lieut. Fairchild, not very much to his surprise, received a challenge. He was a soldier and brave. His reply was prompt. He accepted and named his friend. Dr. Lee, to a place, that was more difficult. Dr. Lee offered his own home. Lieut. Fairchild, with chivalric confidence, accepted the proposition. It was agreed that the weapons should be the famous university duels, long straight steel blades sharpened to the keenness of a razor for three inches from the point and dull the remainder. The two principals, with one second and a gentleman who had been selected as referee, met in the parlor of the physician's home. There had been another second selected, but at the last moment he showed the whites, and Lieut. Fairchild was decided the fight should go on without him. Dr. Lee had sent his family away on a visit, which gave the duels a clear field. The furniture was removed from the parlor, leaving the good-sized room clear of everything but the carpet. Little time was spent in preliminaries, and as the steely blades were hurrying toward the midnight hour, the two antagonists, in a half hour, in shirt and trousers, while on either side stood the two witnesses, each with a sword in hand. For a moment after they had bowed to each other courteously the two duellists stood facing each other waiting. Then low but sharp and clear came the words: "Ready, go."

The bright steel blades flashed and met with a wicked clang that sent the sparks flying in the eyes of both. The blades were raised high and dashed the fire of hate and battle. One minute, two, a touch, the swords were lowered reluctantly. Again the blades hissed as they collided about each other trying to reach the flesh beyond. The duellists were well matched. Outside of its possible tragical outcome it was a pretty fight. So say the witnesses. The men struggled and fought like wildcats. A half hour passed. Hot and weary, the duellists tried every skill of fencing, every known device, to get inside the other's guard, to no effect. But this could not last forever. Dr. Lee made a sharp attack. His long sword leaped over the guard of his antagonist and the next second a big crimson spot dyed the sleeve of Lieut. Fairchild. The swords were beaten up and the two antagonists, in a moment, were separated. The wounded man, he insisted on going on with the fight. His insistence left nothing but to go ahead. The sword of the physician had passed through the fleshy part of the upper portion of the arm. The wound was bound up and the duellists again took their places. Now the lieutenant fought more cautiously and stood more on his guard. A half hour passed, uneventful but by success, attended savagely. Round and round the apartment, now spattered with blood, the two contestants went, cutting, thrusting, parrying, until suddenly the lieutenant's sword glided under the physician's arm and a bright red spot appeared on the breast. Another halt, but the wounded man, as his opponent had done before him, insisted on proceeding. The end was approaching. Fatigued with loss of blood the physician failed in his guard and again the line of steel sprang forth, and this time it came back after it and poured a crimson torrent. That ended the fight. The witnesses declared, bruised honorably bathed in blood. The duellists agreed and shook hands as gentlemen. The physician bound up both his own and his antagonist's wounds, sent out for a case of champagne, and in its sparkling flow the two former antagonists swore renewed friendship. Both were laid up for a few days, but convenient excuses were found for the care with which the lieutenant used his arm and the physician protected his breast.

The parlor was cleaned and furniture restored long before the return of the family, and they never knew so much of anything as a duel had occurred there. So many did anyone outside of the two persons who were present at the time.

CAUGHT ON BOTH SIDES. Euphemism Prevalent in Chicago. A good story is told in the Stuttgart Neue Musik Zeitung concerning one of the most eminent German actresses and a theatrical critic equally well known to fame. A number of ladies and gentlemen were the other day traveling together in a railway carriage from Dresden to Leipzig. Only two of the party were of the same sex, and the conversation became general, and the Court theater at Dresden became the subject of discussion. One lady, who had been present the evening before at the representation of "Baryton" was loud in her expressions of disapproval. "Worse than all," she exclaimed, "that Mme. Schroder is much too old for her part; her singing is becoming unbearable. Don't you think so, too?" she asked, turning to the gentleman next to her. "Would you not rather tell all this to Mme. Schroder, herself?" she is sitting opposite to you," he replied, coldly. After the general silence which followed this remark, the critical lady turned to the actress with many excuses and apologies. "It is that hereditarily, Schrodler, who has influenced my judgment concerning your singing. I believe it is he who is always writing against you. He must be a most disagreeable and peevish person." "Had you not better tell this to M. Schneider himself?" calmly asked the actress; "he is sitting next to you."
