CHAPTER XVII.

From the same direction taken by Taylor, but evidently coming out of a narrow valley bearing off to the left, appeared a white man with a gun on his shoulder. He was in view when half a mile from camp, and long before he reached it all the men were watching his approach.

He was one of the four renegades, and this was the visit Harkins had heard them plotting to make. The captain, Harkins and Joe knew this, but none of the others knew that the girl Lizzie was in camp, she having kept herself secreted in the wagon.

The man continued to advance at a leisurely pace, and by and by he was near enough to the group to call out: "Who are you?"

"Howdy, stranger! I reckon I kin come in, being as I ain't a hostile Indian." The captain returned his salutation, and the renegade came to a halt in the camp, looked keenly around him and continued:

"Come after gold, I reckon, and from the looks of things you've been fooling away your time for a bull week. In course you was green and didn't know or you wouldn't 'ave stopped here two hours."

"What's the matter of this place?" queried the captain. "Nuthin, so fur's grass and water goes, but if you want gold you must go whar it is. Leastwise, the rest of us hev had it."

"A matter of twelve miles up the valley. There's plenty up thar to be had for the digging, and only a small party has got out to yet. Never saw such richness afore. I believe ye kin almost load one o' them wagons in a month."

There were murmurs of admiration and exclamations of astonishment from the men.

"I being to the party up thar," continued the stranger, "but I don't go much on digging out the stuff. Rather be moving around, you know. I kin guarantee that the boys will welcome ye if ye want to come. That's enough for all."

"It is very generous indeed of you," replied the captain. "We came for gold, and of course we must take advantage of your offer."

"What brought me out this morning, at least this way," observed the man as he carefully noted everything in camp. "was a calamity. One of the boys up thar brought his gal out with him. The lujns got arter us and sheart her clean crazy. Since that time she's bin tryin to run away, imagining that the reds were arter her scalp. She got off last night and might hev run this way."

"That's awful!" sighed Harkins. "I've got a gal of my own down in the wagon there, and I'd rather see her dead than crazy."

"The wolves would be likely to pull her down last night," mused Joe. "Two or three big fellows were around camp just before daylight."

"So ye've got a gal of your own?" queried the man of Harkins in tones which betrayed doubt.

"Oh, hee!" called the latter in reply, and the girl put her head out of the wagon and asked what was wanted.

"Waal, I'll hev to look further," said the renegade as he turned away. "Frost gall! How I pity her! And when will ye be ready to move up the valley to the gold fields?"

"Today perhaps," answered the captain. "Better not lose any time, as thar will be a rush here from all directions. So long to ye."

When he had cleared the camp Harkins told his story and the man's object was made plain. Harkins did not keep back the secret of the cave, but told it just as he had received it and suggested that in case the contents could be found there should be an equal division.

"They want us to move up the valley in order to let them out," explained the captain. "Therefore our plan will be to remain where we are until we know what there is in the story. They haven't found the cave yet and there is a chance of our coming in first. We shall certainly do some looking for it. We'll let that chap get well out of sight and then go on a still hunt."

A gentleman who is familiar with the stamping grounds of the rowdy bank robbers, and who was at The Dalles when the robbers were brought in there, remarked, last evening that the people in that section of the country, while perfectly certain that the right men have been captured, are equally certain that they can never be convicted of the crime.

"The country surrounding Antelope," he said, "is strictly grazing lands. The stockmen there are all well-to-do, but have been looked upon for some time with suspicion, and any one who lost a bunch of sheep, cattle or horses in the surrounding country never thought of going within the borders of the county to look for them. In fact, many of the sheepmen in the county have been looked upon as 'fences,' and it was not considered safe to prow around their ranches in search of lost stock.

"The captured men belong to this class, and have lots of friends all through the eastern part of the state, who now stand ready to prove as many alibis as are necessary to clear them. While at The Dalles I learned that the Zechary boys are brothers-in-law of a state senator, and that the rest are also well connected, so that if money alone is required to clear them any amount of it can easily be found. But their defense will undoubtedly bein proving a complete alibi, and, unless there are spies in their crowd, which is improbable, they will soon be set free. There is nothing in the fact that the men were traced by the brands on the horses which they rode, for it is apparent, on the face of it, that men who would rob a bank in broad daylight would not hesitate to borrow some horses for use upon the occasion. Colville reservation, where the last two men were caught, is about 400 miles from the home of the robbers. It is a wild and rough country, and would make a splendid rendezvous for robbers."

En. GAZETTE:—The above is a clipping from the Oregonian of recent date. Be kind enough to publish it. It will prove an interesting item to your large list of readers who twice a week receive your paper from every postoffice in Eastern Oregon.

During the past season I traveled something like seven thousand miles in Eastern Oregon and had the pleasure of studying the habits, customs, manners and general reputation of its citizens thoroughly, and I here take pleasure in asserting that the author of the article in question is simply a cross between an uncompromising liar of the most pronounced type and an egregious ass of ridiculous proportions.

He says "the country surrounding Antelope is strictly grazing lands. The stockmen there are well-to-do, but have been looked upon for some time with suspicion. Many of the sheepmen have been looked upon as 'fences,' etc."

Did any one ever, since the great flood, read anything half so absurd, in a great (?) daily? The people of Eastern Oregon are the most peaceable, law-abiding citizens of the state. Some of them are enjoying their well-earned prosperity. They have never participated in unlawful proceedings nor are they in any wise disposed to aid or abet outlawry, as indicated, "by perjury if necessary."

The arrest of two or three men charged with crime is insufficient evidence upon which to judge a whole community. There can be seen some palpable excuse on the part of detectives who partly for gain and partly for notoriety, make arrests, but there can be no excuse for this flagrant outrage on the part of the journalist. It would be just as fair to vilify the people of Portland by the act of Wilson, Burdette Wolfe or some other scoundrel.

If the evidence claimed, is actually in the possession of the authorities, the men arrested are on slippery ground for it is openly charged that at least two of them are brothers-in-law of a state senator. That is certainly incriminating. No well-guided family should in any way be connected with a state senator or even a politician of any stripe.

If this imaginative city pencil pasher would seek subjects of a sensational nature upon which to write, he might, by investigation, find a prolific field within the sacred precincts of his own beautiful city. Why not tell us about city "fences"? Why not tell us something about the decapitation of the official head of Chief Spencer recently, or at least the cause that led to it? Was it due to neglect of duty or enforcing the law? I perhaps the same agency can show why in a few days after the proceeding just related, that gambling and bawdy

Our hope and expectation is that protectionists, while willing to give the incoming administration fair trial, will watch and work, steadfast to their principles and positive in their attitude against free trade or tariff for revenue only.

It is time to begin "the campaign of education" in row, just after the election. The defeated army, conscious of its power and of the strength of its good cause, keeps sound in heart and heroic in mood, and rallies and drills for its coming victory.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

The campaign is finished and the result of the election is the national success of the democratic party, with its free trade platform. Does that result show the protection cause lost, or the efforts in its behalf futile? Not at all, and this result need not be held surprising.

In 1890 came the great landslide toward democracy and tariff for revenue only—free trade finally voted. The election this year shows a gain in the popular vote for protection, a gain in republican members of congress, but not gain enough to overturn the caucus of two years ago. We are going up, not down.

The country vote is for republican protection, but the city vote for democratic free trade overcame it. In New York and Chicago this is especially manifest. The vote of the country is more thoughtful and intelligent than that of the city. In New York city for instance, while we have able and thoughtful men, the crowd that shouts for tammany is far less thoughtful than the farmers and mechanics and others in town and country. For protection being a "lost cause," that is impossible. If a home market for home industry, if the upbuilding in our midst of varied occupations—farm and forest and mine and sea—be consistent, changing easily, and all developing home resources and internal wealth—the wise and true conduct of affairs, they cannot be lost. The protective policy is the gain in the civilized world, even in Great Britain, where the workmen demand it. The election may check it here, but only for a time.

The democratic party in the ascendancy will have a path before it. Let it "push things" toward its platform promise of free trade, and it will find great industrial enterprises, owned and managed by men of both parties in partnership, who will not be willing victims of politicians. Its household will be divided. The solid South, conservative, dominating, lawless, possessed by the blindness of the old slaveocracy of which it is the lingering remnant—will demand free trade. The men of practical business and industry South and North will say, "Go slow."

Let the party inaugurate its platform policy, and the revisions and disasters, the lack of employment and lowering of wages which our policy will sweep it out of power as by a whitening cloth. Let it hesitate and tinker and palter over tariffs, and it will derange business, check industry by its uncertainty, and show again its incompetence to frame a schedule of customs duties consistent with any policy or fit for any practical purpose—an incompetence shown in the Morrison and Wood and Mills jumble of ineognitancy called tariff bills, which did not even gain the united support of the democrats in congress in those days.

Let the party do what it has done in the past, and it will derange business, check industry by its uncertainty, and show again its incompetence to frame a schedule of customs duties consistent with any policy or fit for any practical purpose—an incompetence shown in the Morrison and Wood and Mills jumble of ineognitancy called tariff bills, which did not even gain the united support of the democrats in congress in those days.
