WHAT THEY DESERVE.

The Salt Lake Tribune says editorially, under date Dec. 15, 1892, in summing up the probable failure of the silver conference, the following:

"If we had our way, in case that conference fails, we would at once issue invitations to our sister republics on this continent for a conference, would propose to them a general uniform system of money—gold and silver—and would put a direct tax of 20 percent ad valorem on any silver that might be sent from the Old World; we would make a closer alliance with the republics of this continent, and give notice to the Old World that we had determined to just as nearly as possible do without communication with it. We would agree upon some ratio between gold and silver which would be satisfactory to the men of Spanish America, and we would put every ounce that could be dug from the hills into circulation either directly or through silver certificates, and would go on redeeming this continent and using the silver the way it was intended to be used, when it was long ago coined in the hills to await the coming of our race. There would be nothing discouraging in the situation if the men of our country were only broad minded enough to see and understand the significance of money and its effect upon a people. If they would only understand that cheap prices do not mean prosperity, as can be directly established by looking at the prices in China and Japan where those people require every thing that can be raised from the ground for food, where often thousands and tens of thousands of them die from famine because they have not the little money necessary to buy and transport food for them. If our people would only get the idea that an increased volume of gold and silver increases prosperity and wealth, and would advance civilization, that a reduced quantity meant gravitating backward toward the plane whereon the Chinese and Japanese stand, there would be no trouble. In point of fact, away 2000 bankers in London, Amsterdam, Vienna, Paris and Berlin, and leave the question to the people over there and they would vote two to one in favor of free silver as money of ultimate redemption. Take away 250 of the same class from Boston, New York and Philadelphia, and make an appeal to the people of the United States, and they would round the same verdict. We look upon it as a great misfortune that Mr. Gladstone became Premier, for another year at least. We think if Lord Salisbury had been left in his place, with Mr. Groven as chancellor of the exchequer of Great Britain, there would have been a different tone throughout the whole conference. As it is, read between the lines, everything that is done shows, as far as England is concerned, that her commissioners went to that conference with intentions something like this:

"You may enlarge the use of silver a little, treating it all the time as a commodity, but, if anything else is proposed, have the conference adjourn if possible, and, if you cannot, draw out and come home." It is very hard dealing with men when they meet in a spirit of that kind. We presume our commissioners have found it so, and are as anxious to get through as they are, feeling that the whole sentiment is against them, and that whatever our country might propose to do it will have to do of its own accord."

SOMETHING ABOUT MONEY.

The Daily Rocky Mountain News, of Denver, now reaches our table regularly. Through the leading populist paper in Colorado, and in fact the nation, it has its own ideas about money. It says in a recent issue:

"To say that no money can possess intrinsic value is open to dispute. If the holder of a gold or silver dollar can melt it and obtain for the result in open market a coined dollar in gold or silver, that dollar has intrinsic value—indeed, the very basis of its previous legal status as money—to the extent of a dollar.

"Intrinsic" may not be the proper word to convey the exact meaning intended. Lexicographers define it as "inherent," fixed in the nature of things, "unborn" and the like. Value or market price may not be properly classed as "intrinsic" to any species of property. For value or price depends upon circumstances largely extrinsic—such as supply and demand—that are not and cannot be inherent, unborn or fixed in the nature of things. But "intrinsic" is a term which by common usage, as applied to value or price, has acquired additional meanings that those given to it by the lexicographers. As applied to money, it means that the substance which composes it has a value on the market independent of its legal money quality.

"If any substance, whatever its parts, can possess intrinsic value, then metal money possesses it. It is in this sense that the term 'intrinsic value' as applied to money is popularly used and understood.

In speaking of what a correspondent says in the same issue, it remarks: "The News does not believe that 'irredeemable paper money is a silly phrase.' Governments have often issued paper money that was irredeemable—that is, the holders could neither obtain metal money in exchange nor would the government issuing it receive it in payment of government debts.

"Mr. Wayland," meaning the correspondent, "quite evidently acts upon the presumption that money is money—whether it is gold, silver or paper—and, being 'money,' each is ultimate, and is not to be and cannot be redeemed. He claims that the three kinds of money are as like each other as the three sides of a right angle triangle—being exactly equal, there is no difference in length or function. It must be upon this theory that the advocates of flat money stand and justify their demand for unlimited issues of paper money, without any redemption in prospect or provided for.

"It is comprehensible how a country walled in, shut out from travel, trade and intercourse with foreign nations, could get along solely with flat money. In such a country the proposition to issue a million of legal tender paper dollars, to pay them out by the government in the building of railroads, to receive them back in payment for freights and travel and all other taxes, and to pay them out again and keep them in continuous circulation, without any gold or silver money redemption, might be logically maintained. But how it can be in a country whose population travels abroad, which transacts business amounting to billions annually with foreign countries, whose people must have money possessing 'intrinsic' value to pay for their foreign purchases, and to settle their foreign balances, is something that cannot be well comprehended. The News stands by it, that there is money possessing intrinsic value, and there is irredeemable paper money; for, when one is in possession of a government note called money, cannot on presentation of it secure in exchange a dollar possessing the intrinsic value of a dollar—that is irredeemable paper money, although it may be receivable for public taxes, and citizens may be compelled to accept it in settlement of debts.

"It does not follow because of this, that the only money this government should issue is gold and silver, or paper money with sufficient gold and silver in the treasury to redeem it. The News is a firm believer in the demand of the people's party that money to the amount of fifty dollars per capita should be put in circulation—and it knows that even free coinage for silver and the gold in the country will not supply nearly that amount. Therefore it is inclined to believe that the gold money and that furnished by free silver coinage should be supplemented by a sufficiently large issue of treasury notes or greenbacks, made legal tender and receivable for all government dues, to give the country the necessary volume. But not of irredeemable paper money. It should be made redeemable in gold or silver, at the option of the government on presentation."

To REPAIR the serious inroads being made on the gold of this country by foreign countries, Secretary Foster is offering bounties for transportation on all currency and other money not gold, offered in exchange for the "yellow boys." In that way, fully $200,000 in gold was added in quite a short time, and the treasury promises to regain shortly the amount taken out by foreigners. A telegram from New York says: "Information was received at the treasury department to the effect that the financial flurry in New York is practically over for the present, and that there is no longer any prospect of a panic. Money is reported easy at exchange; has fallen below the shipping point, so that the heavy exportations of gold are not likely to continue. Secretary Foster said this morning that $3,000,000 in gold had been taken out of the treasury this week and that about $1,400,000 more would probably be lost before the week was ended. He is confident, however, he said, that this gold will soon be returned with interest through the regular channels of trade. He said there is nothing really alarming in the situation, and that stocks apparently unsettled now will readily adjust themselves. Mr. Hepburn, comptroller of the currency, also said this morning that there was really no occasion for alarm at the state of affairs in Wall street, and he would be surprised if the apparent stringency was not intended solely for its effect on congress. Mr. Hepburn said that while there may be some sentiment in the situation, he was convinced that the interests of the country demanded the repeal of the Sherman silver bill.

The reason that silver should be redeemed is not for the miner alone but for the business and labor of the country everywhere. It would double the quantity of redemption money. It would make certain a large and safe increase in the volume of paper as well as of coin money. To secure the free coinage of silver would be an irrefutable assurance that the grip of the money plutocrats had been loosened and that the conscience of the people had finally triumphed.—R. M. News.

Our esteemed friend and co-worker in the journalistic field, Jno. A. Brown, of Arlington, calls our attention to the fact that the Walla Walla and Vancouver land offices require in all cases where parties desire to purchase railroad land that they publish same as all other lands proffered. We call the attention of the local offices, before whom proofs are taken, to this, that they may offer protection to all parties concerned in acquiring title to railroad land.

As Indiana man attempted to pull the tail off a horse with his hands lately and only succeeded in making the animal so tired that he sat down on the man's leg and broke it. The horse's tail is now very frisky, but the tale of the man is mournful. Such is human life. Today we have a great pull and find ourselves the beheld of all beholders, and tomorrow we lose our grip and limp away with a tale of woe!

SECRETARY FOSTER thinks that the conference across the sea will yet accomplish much good ere their final adjournment. He cites B. Schmidt's admission that unless something was done for silver, as was money, serious consequences would follow, as an indication that even capitalists are getting their eyes open.

local offices. The fact of the matter is, that justice demands the publication of intention to purchase railroad lands, else what is to hinder anyone from buying the very home of the settler, who would know nothing of it under the present system till the purchase would be consummated and receipt issued. This means expensive contests, which is forcing unnecessary burdens on us. The settlers deserve this protection more than newspapers the business. As Brother Shatt, of the Condon Globe, writes, "Pat, there should be no discrimination against the settlers."

A PANIC in this country appeared imminent a few days ago. Now all signs seem to have disappeared, for a time, at least. It looks as though that the money power will insist in going on, narrowing the volume of money as well as making it dearer through monetaryism till disastrous, financial reverses will result. England can no more maintain her present money policy than can the United States, having with her dependence on India, over 3,000,000,000 ounces of silver.

AGRICULTURE & COLLEGE NOTES.

This college library now numbers 2,630 volumes, not including magazines. This gentleman is about to demonstrate that in Oregon, winter is a good time for growing cabbage as any other season in the year.

The average of each term's work done by the students will be sent to the parents or guardians, so they will know whether or not the student is keeping up or not the work.

The college is preparing a bulletin on the results of the past season's work with the Codlin Moth, it will be issued early in the spring, the same bulletin will treat on apples and peaches.

A bulletin is now in print for the horticultural department, referring to the test of small fruit and vegetables with hints on their cultivation; also giving directions for the treatment of old orchards.

On the third Sunday in this month the students of the people of Condon listened to a very interesting speech, made by Prof. Bloss, in the College Chapel. His subject was the "Relation of Science to Christianity."

Prof. Coats, the horticulturist, is quite proud of his green house just at this season, as indeed he has a right to be. The thirty attentions and making a grand display; some varieties producing 8 to 10 inches to eight inches in diameter. Mr. Coats' crop of winter cabbage is also attracting considerable attention.

The granting of sixty varieties of apples of which roots, three of each, has been done by the students. These have been set out two years in the trial orchard, for the purpose of testing their quality. Such work gives the students the opportunity of acquiring information in the line of laying out and planting orchards. All varieties worked on whole roots are making strong growth, while those worked on piecemeal are making very weak growth at present.

Arrangements are being made for a grand literary contest between the Websterians and Clearions, to take place to be held the latter part of January. Prof. Bloss has offered a fine gold medal to be worn by the president of the successful society. This will be one of the most interesting literary occasions in the history of the college. Great preparations are being made for the contest each society working hard to get its best material in the field and the program will soon be completed.

Medical department, the building is a two-story brick, 38x78 feet, with a wing 19x32 feet. The building is devoted entirely to the use of the mechanical department with the exception of one room which is occupied by the college printing office. On the first floor we have the following rooms: A recreation room; machine and blacksmith shop. The second floor is divided into a drafting room, a wood working shop, and printing office. The shops are equipped with the tools and machinery from the best makers in the country. The idea being not only to have the shops well supplied with necessary tools but also to make each shop a model as respects an systematic arrangement. Motive power for the shops and printing office is furnished by a fifteen horse power steam engine.

FROM IONE.

EDITOR HEPPNER GAZETTE:

In your issue of the 15th inst., I notice that the Ione correspondent is not following strictly the principles of his party doctrine, he being a populist; or at least he has said to me that he voted the Weaver ticket, which I have no right to dispute. [The populist doctrine is preached to do justice equally, to all men.] The Ione correspondent has not duly considered before wishing his pen, as there are other parties living in Ione deserving of praise more than Frank Willis. There is one who should be mentioned above all others, and that person is Tom Carl, he being an older resident of the place and an older person. Mr. Correspondent should not shove in boys to endeavor to outdo Tom in generosity. Just go to Tom when you want to borrow hay for your cow or some straw, or meat, or flour or lard, sugar, coffee, tea or most anything you can mention. You can always get it. I believe the only thing which I have known him to refuse to loan was his barn for the winter, which, of course, was an impossibility as he has a cow and a horse or two of his own to look after, or I firmly believe he would have loaned the barn.

Now, Mr. Editor, don't you think it rather small business to try to push in a young man to the front who has nothing to loan but a horse and cart, saddle and a small dog?

You may say to the many readers of the Gazette that even the village of Ione has been visited by a couple of inches of the "beautiful" during the day, which reminds me that Tom Carl and Ben Case are building a nice sleigh for C. A. Rheas, which is slowly nearing completion, being now almost ready for the road.

IONE ITEMS.

Are the citizens of Morrow county aware that Ione has lost its name as a "dead town"? We are now up with the times. We believe, this fall to have built the most neat and comfortable school house in Morrow county, credit Heppner. Our educational advantages are well appreciated by the inhabitants of our vicinity, and several families have moved in. We have employed Fred Balgley, one of Morrow county's first-class teachers, and his long experience and efficient management of our school has convinced us that he has come to stay. All who see Ione hereafter will be convinced that it has a great future.

The R. R. conductor, by means of his faithful locomotive, pulled up to the Heppner institute last Wednesday evening, three teachers of our vicinity, Miss Ada R. Redford, Miss Anna Schott and A. W. Balgley. Miss Ada is known as the life in society. The teachers at the institute enjoy her company, especially one of the boys, but he should be aware that W. L. and A. R. have not forgotten each other. All are convinced that the institute was a great improvement over that of last year, and were well pleased and contented. Our teachers returned for duty in the time.
