conding life in strange ways the ancients beat the modern record.

The Emperors Anastasius and Garus were both killed by lightning—a finale which, if it happened to a modern monarch (and far more to two of them), would certainly give occasion for much journalistic enterprise. But in those days it really seems as though great sovereigns, by no means admirable in other respects, went out of their way in the manner of their exits to give their subjects a sensation. Charles II. of Navarre, having become paralyzed, was sewn up in a sheet dipped in distilled spirits, hopes to recover his benumbed joints," and the surgeon, wanting a knife to cut his thread, made use of the flame of a candle, which caused the poor king to perish miserably. Henry I. o. Spain was killed by a tile falling from a housetop. Pope Clement VII. died on the fumes from a poisoned torch, and

Pope Adrian VI. from swallowing a fly in a glass of spring water. Among lesser persons, the fate of Heraelius, the Ephesian, would have been most singular had he not been act ing under medical advice; but now tha so many people are killed "by the doc tor's orders," it excites less surprisc The particular fad of his family physician was mud baths (of a peculiar kind); and having anointed himself all over with this beastliness, and "sitting in the sun," the dogs, "supposing him to be a wild beast," tore him to pieces Similarly, the poet Anaereon, giving ear to his physician's statement that the juice of raisins would prolong his life shortened it by swallowing a grape

In English history, perhaps the most ensational catastrophe in the way of 'exit" is that of the outbreak of jail fever at Oxford in 1577, when "th arose such a sudden damp in court" that all present were in danger of being smothered. The gentlemen on the grand jury "died that instant." The lord chief justice and the high sheriff sickened and died within the week. In St. Louis, all "perished five hundred persons, amongst whom there was neither woman nor child." The means by which the abbot of Tavistock got the manor of Plumstock into his possession is indi-rectly connected with this subject, for, though the manner of death was com-mon enough, the device used for evad-Ing it (though in vain) was most peculiar. One Child, a rich landowner Devonshire, was lost on Dartmoor in a deep snow. He killed his borse and crept under the carcass for warmth, naving first written with his blood these words:

"What!" exclaimed an incredulous individual, "do you mean to say that the same cat used to sit regularly out on the street and allow the car to pass over it without cetting hurt?" "Fact." replied the driver. "The cat seemed to have a craze for that sort of thing and wasn't a bit afraid of horses
