ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.

Today is "St. Valentine's Day." It is, or more correctly was, celebrated in England, Scotland, and in different parts of the continent, particularly Lorraine and Maine in France, by a very peculiar and amusing custom. On the eve of St. Valentine, a number of young folksmaids and bachelors-would assemble together, and inscribe upon little billets the names of an equal number of maids and bachelors of their acquaintance, throw the whole into a receptacle of some sort, and then draw them lotterywise-oare, of course, being taken that last century, remarks, "the man stuck him, than to her to whom he had fallen." readily be supposed, often led to real ones; because one necessary consequence of them was that, for a whole year, a to have been restricted to young single people could be chosen.

For some time back, the festival-at least in England and Scotland-has ceas ed to possess the graceful symbolic meaning it used to have, and has become considerable nuisance. "The approach of the day is now heralded by the appearance in the print sellers' shop-windows of vast numbers of missives calculated for use on this occasion, each generally consisting of a single sheet of post-paper. on the first page of which is seen some ridiculous colored caricature of the male or female figure, with a few burlesque verses below. More rarely, the print is of a sentimental kind, such as a view of Hymen's altar, with a pair undergoing in tiation into wedded happiness before it, while Cupid flutters above, and hearts transfixed with his darts decorate the corners. Maid-servants and young fellows interchange such epistles with each other on the 14th of February, no doubt conceiving that the joke is amazingly good; and, generally, the newspapers do not fail to record that the London postmen delivered so many hundred thousand more letters on that day than they do in general."-Chamber's Book of Days, vol.

The connection of the custom with St. Valentine is purely accidental. In the legends of the different saints of that name recorded in the Acta Sanctorum, state. Let us hold up our end, or 14th of February is found. It has been blackism, suggested by Mr. Douce, in his Illustrations of Shakespeare, that the custom may have descended to us from the ancient Komans, who, during the Luperca-Ifa, celebrated in the month of February, were wont, among other things, "to put the names of young women into a box, from which they were drawn by the men as chance directed;" and that the Christian clergy, finding it difficult or impossible to extirpate this pagan practice, gave it at least a religious espect by substituting the names of particular saints for those of the women; and it is certainly the field. At this stage I became suddenly worse, and once more gained admission to the hospital, where I lay in a miserable suffering condition for two months or more. In the spring of 1891 I returned to Oakwille, and made an attempt to do something toward my own support. I was given light work in the basket factory, but had to be conveyed to and from my place of labor in a buggy and carried from the rig to a table in the works on which I sat and performed my work. In August, 1891, I was again strucken down, and remained in an utterly helpless condition until January 1892. At this time Mr. James, a local druggist, strongly urged me to try Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People. I was prejudiced against proprietary medicines as I had spent nearly all I possessed on numerous highly recommended so-called remedies. I had taken into my system large quantities of different seminary medicines.
