The Output of the Largest Cream ery in the World.

How the Milk Is Treated to Convert It Into a Golden Staple-Sait by the Carload Used in Its Manuf .cture.

Ten thousand pounds of butter daily. This is the wholesale way in which the largest creamery in the world turns out the golden product that melts with delicious flavor on your hot tea bisenits.
says the Burlington (Vt.) Free Press. Within a radius of twenty-six miles from St. Albans are forty-four separate stations, where the dairy farmer leaves his milk for the Franklin County Creamery association. After the cream is separated from the milk it is shipped by rail in special cars to the creamery at St. Albans, and by undergoing various interesting processes is transformed into butter When the cream reaches the creamery it goes into a receiving tank on the first floor: from there it is pumped into storage vats in the second story, where it is "cured." Then it is ready for the churn, and it is sent through a pipe into the churning-room, where ten square Blanchard churns are almost constant ly at work. Each churn churns five hundred pounds of butter at a time. When the butter is taken from the churn it is sent to the working-room where four power-workers are revolving. This is a novel sight-z round ta-ble about eight feet in diameter revolving under two conical rollers, also constantly turning, while between the rollers and the table is an inch of but ter.
