The Original DICTIONARY.

BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE publishers, we are able to obtain a number of the above book, and propose to furnish a copy to each of our subscribers.

The dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy, and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred other volumes of the choicest books could supply. Young and old, educated and ignorant, rich and poor, should have it within reach, and refer to its contents every day in the year.

Assome have asked if this is really the Original Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, we are able to state we have learned direct from the publishers the fact, that this is the very work comblete on which about forty of the best years of the author's life were so well employed in writing. It contains the entire vocabulary of about 180,000 words, including the correct spelling, derivation and definition of same, and is the regular standard size, containing about 30,000 square inches of printed surface, and is bound in coth half morocco and sleep.

THE ART STUDENT.

Pve had some interesting experiences, I can tell you. It's not a bad life, on the whole, but at first it used to be very annoying in some ways. To begin with, they planted me down in such a draft and in the worst light possible, so that I could not see anything, nor could any one see me, and then they would not give me a new pedestal—they tried to palm off on me one that belonged to a discarded Nereid, which made me look top heavy, as it was much too small.

However, one day a waiter, who was rushing past with a soup tureen (it was when I stood close to the door of the refreshment room in the gallery, you know), tumbled up against me and smashed a great piece of the pedestal. Afterward, when every one had gone and the place was quiet, I just leaned over to one side a bit and slid down. Hurt myself? Oh, dear, no! I chipped my lyre rather. There was a fuss next morning when the curator came round. That waiter got into no end of a row and had to pay for my new pedestal and lyre. It was a pity I couldn't explain, but he was a poor fool, and I wasn't sorry to see him sacked for his disrespectful clumsiness.

There was a little student who came to draw here, a little bit of a thing, with a sallow face and a slight limp. She was always shabby. Her gloves (one button black kid) were very much eracked. She wore a battered black straw hat which had outlined the picturesque stage, with a wreath of limp, streaky roses round the crown, even in midwinter. Her dress, such as it was, was gray linsey, and her poor little square tood boots were patched and repatched. The only points about her were her clean collar and her big, hungry eyes. Some time ago a young man came here pretty frequently for several months. He's a fine, handsome fellow, very like that sturdy Discobulus you see straight in front of you. By Jupiter! that boy can draw! I could tell he had it in him the first time I saw him handle a crayon. The little lame student was passing him one day, looking more tired than ever, and she tripped over the edge of a barrier that had been put to screen off the Laocoon family, who were undergoing repairs, when down went everything with a clatter, including the poor little soul herself. The other student, whom I will call "The Boy" for distinction. was up in a moment, had put her on her feet again, and picked up all the dispersed articles with a reassuring "All around him and enjoy himself. She lay there quite still, with her head on the marble, and I saw a tear fall from the eyes of the lovely goddess and glisten in the girl's dull hair like a moonstone. The little gray student lifted up her head pitifully and looked up into the sweet, grave, but (alas! for her) sightless eyes.
"I am not beautiful like you," she moaned pathetically, "but I will be patient and good." One morning I heard a soft laugh be hind me, and then the Boy's voice. He passed me with a tall, fair girl. They passed in front of a bust of Socrates. 'So you don't think much of him?" she said reproachfully. "No. Why should I?" said the Boy. "But he is a philosopher and a great man," she urged. The Boy looked straight into her eyes, "But he didn't know you, sweetheart," he said, putting a strong arm round her.

There was a tremulous silence for a few minutes. Only Venus and I heard the deep, quick breaths coming from the huddeep, quick breaths coming from the huddled little figure concealed behind a pillar. The Boy and the fair girl passed out, she leaning on his arm and looking half roguishly, half tenderly up to him.

It was then ked around for the little gray student. She seemed stunned. After a minute she pushed back her easel, rose to her feet and came forward, groning with her hands in a back her easet, rose to her feet and came forward, groping with her hands in a blind, bewildered fashion, then fell prone at the foot of the Venus.
