REDEEMED (Written by Leda, Bond.) Into the shade of the old orchard hall, Noiselessly crept a woman frail, Pausing not till she humbly knelt Bowing her head on the alter rail.

Slowly she raised her weeping eyes To the marble face of the Christ above, The wan sweet face so filled with woe Yet gazing down with a mighty love. O! Jesus look on my blotted soul Enter my heart so fully black; Make it pure as in childhood days

Cleanse oh cleanse, and take it back. Down to the deepest pits of sin-I have decended step by step. Living through scenes no tongue can tell. Night has oft found me on the streets Luring the pure from their homes away Mid the sin-doomed regions of the town

I, in my beauty, held proud sway. A face of my play-mate in childhood days, Has beented my guilty heart through all. For I fear to meet at the bar of God The soul I have filled with sin and gall. Today I met upon the street

The men who stelle my honored name And the face I loved more than God and home Brought back the past in a tide of pain. One word the name once loved at home Uttered by him at my mother's side Was all, and he passed his separate way, Held sloft by his wealth and pride. A longing came on me to turn my steps

Here to the feet of an injured God Then while a sob convulsed my frame Lowly her head sank on her breast This from a life of sin and pain, Twillight deepened into night: Morning broke; but her soul had fled,

Cleansed, redeemed by that mast mad prayer. And what of him who had wrecked her life, He was a man and a mask of gold O! mothers, daughters, sisters, wives, Stoop to redeem a woman lost; Shun the man who has wrought such wrong.

Dare to condemn him at any cost.
