HURRYING UP JURIES. Why Verdicts in District Courts Are Ren-dered Without Delay.

Give a jury of six or twelve restful men a comfortable, well lighted and cool room, plenty of tobacco and ice water, and there is nothing by which the judge or the counsel on either side can guage the time of deliberation. Under such circumstances, says the Newark Sunday Call, juries have been known to remain out twelve hours on a case involving one dollar and fortynine cents, and then come in with a disagreement. There is such a thing, however, as forcing a speedy verdict by making the retiring room uncomfortable. Freezing the jury is said to have been practiced with success in Minnesota, where the counsel for the defense "saw" the janitor, and it is just possible that windows have been nailed down to stew a jury into hasty action in warmer climates.

No such precaution is necessary in the new quarters of the district courts in this city. The jury-room is a nar-row apartment, situated directly over the boiler room, with one window opening upon a narrow and breath less alley, flanked by the dead wall of the next building. It has not been insinuated that any lawyer has encouraged the engineer to put on extra steam when a jury was deliberating over a case, but it is said that of late no ury has taken more than five minutes to fry the fat out of any case which has required discussion in this room. It is used by both courts, and is the only apartment accessible. Of course, the doors must be shut when the jury is deliberating, and then the window does not admit the smallest of the zephyrs which may by accident have found a playground in the alleyway. It is said that one lawyer announced his intention of appealing a case because the jury found a verdict four minutes after the doors were closed. One of the jurors says, however, that there was a heated discussion over the ease during the short time the jury

One pair known by their master as Rustem and Sohrab degenerated first into "Rusty and Soreback," and fell ultimately into the commonplace as "the little horse and the docthor." There is generally somebody-a lady as a rule-in each district on whom its finest malaprops are fathered, sometimes quite unfairly. It is she who is reported to have made that speech about the glories of her father's house, up to the door of which there ran a "revenue of popular trees;" she who asked her daughter to play that little "malady" she had learned at the "cemetery," and she again who pronounced

A dary on a Strike. The most remarkable case in Texas legal history was tried recently at Oakland before Justice English-Mrs. Ella Halloway vs. J. H. Van Alstyne says a Houston correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The case consumed the day and was given to the jury at night. Before retiring the jury demanded that each man be paid his fifty-cent fee. The justice de-murred and ordered them to bring a verdict or they would get, no fee. The jury retired and in fifteen minutes entered court. They had a sealed verdict Before turning it over to the justice the jury struck for their hard-carned fees. Under protest the justice gave each grizzly bears in his book, "The Wilder- juror fifty cents. He opened the verdict. mess Hunter," relates a story told him by Dr. Merrill. of the United States army. "A remarkable incident," Mr. Roosevelt calls it. Dr. Merrill. in company with an old hunter, was followed as all trail in a deep narrow. lowing an elk trail in a deep, narrow was given pro or con. After being out another hour the jury reported On turning a corner of the canyon, they were still unable to agree. Judge the two men were charged on by an English then demanded the return of old she grizzly, so close that it was the fees. The jurors refused to suronly by good lack that one of their render and a fine of two collars and hurried shots disabled her and sent her fifty cents each was absenced and their tumbling over a bank, where she was incarceration ordered. A compromise was finally reached by four of the jury They found that she had been lying returning the fees and the other two directly across the game trail on a paying the fine of two dollars and fifty smooth, well-beaten patch of bare cents. The higher courts will be inearth, which looked as if it had been dicted with the case.

Turtles Which Contribute to the World's Food Supply.

Ocean Depths and Fresh Water Tor-tolses Which Are Highly Valued in the Markets.

Forty-two species of tortoises in habit the United States and adjacent seas. They furnish nearly all of the reptilian food supply of this country which is of great aggregate quantity and represents a value of hundreds o thousands of dollars annually. Among them, says the St. Louis Globe-Demo crat, are several gigantic kinds which live in the ocean, and are remarkable in many ways. These marine turtles are specially adapted to an aquatic mode of existence. Their bodies have a specific gravity almost exactly equal to that of the water in which they are immersed, so that they are able to sustain themselves at the surface for any length of time without fatigue. The never go ashore except to lay eggs. Their hind feet are used as rudders. while the fore feet, with which they propel themselves, have a motion sim ilar to that of a bird's wings. In fact all their movements are more those of flying than of swimming. These giant turtles are found all along the Atlantic coast, though it is only in southern waters that they occur in great numbers. One of the most powerful of them is the logger-head, which attains a weight of sixteen hundred pounds. It is a rapid swimmer and is often seen far from land, floating on the waves asleep. Carnivorous by nature, it feeds on crabs and fishes, and especially on a large species of conch, which it breaks with city. its enormous jaws and devours in large quantities. The flesh of this tortoise is leathery and oily, with a strong smell of musk. In the West Indies sold in the markets. A considerable amount of oil may be obtained from the loggerhead, but its rank odor un-fits it for use in cooking. It has been employed to smear on the sides of ves-sels, which it is said to preserve from shipworms, and to soften certain leathers. The scales forming the shell, though bigger than those of the tortoise-shell turtle, are very thin and apt to be wrinkled and filled with impuri ties. On that account they are not used to any great extent in the arts.

The tortoise shell of the Florida and Gulf coast is found in many other parts English gardeners are almost more daring than the cooks in handling of the world. It does not attain a weight of more than three hundred pounds. Its diet is exclusively vegetable, but it names of plants, says the London Globe. Not long ago in a malaprop competition there appeared the followso that fishermen have to be on their guard against its attacks. The scales or plates that cover its bony shell form the tortoise shell of commerce. Then, when the turn of the tide takes the ball out to sea, the turtle follows it, feeding on it. When, therefore, the fishermen find any of these balls float ing down a creek, they at once spread a strong net across the mouth and alcure a number of the tortoises known in cookery as "calipash."

THE REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE OF POSTMASTER WOODSON, OF PANAMA. MO.-FOR TEN YEARS A CRIP-PLE-TODAY A WELL AND HEARTY MAN.

(From the Kansas City Times,) The people of Rich Hill, Mo., and ricinity, have recently been startled by seeming miracle of healing. For years one of the best known men in Bates and Vernon counties has been Mark M. Woodson, now postmaster at Panama, and brother of ex-State Inspector of Mines, C. C. #### INDIAN NAMES a Matter of Difficulty. The London newspapers occasion considerable mirth to their Indian con-temporaries by the spelling of Indian vords. It appears that, in reference to the native princes and noblemen who were present at the opening of the Imperial institute, we tried to strike out on an original line, but were only able to spell "Gackwar" in seven different ways, and "Bhownugger" in four. Indian papers, it seems, are not wholly successful. We still occasionally see "Puna" and "Poona," "Hindu" and "Hindoo," "Dacoit" and "Dakait," and so on, according to the taste and fancy of the speller.

London Newspapers Find Their Spelling

In a supplement to the Bombay Government Gazette we now have a revised alphabetical list of Madras place names, which is "to be strictly adhered to." In this list, while retaining such monstrositles as Birukkazhikkunram. Suncaraperumalkoyil, Gannamanayakkanur and Ammayanayakkanur, a large proportion of the popular versions are retained, with the thin disguise of a "K" for a "C." Three-andtwenty out of the thirty-six pages of the Notification are occupied by a list of place-names "in which the system of transliteration has been followed," and a wonderful list it is.

A Joke Tried by Jury. A North Carolina paper tells the following: At Harnett county superior court, a few years since, Judge Shipp presiding, the trial of a cause had been protracted till near midnight. The jury was tired and sleepy and showed flagging attention. Willie Murchison, who was addressing the jury, thought to arouse them, so he said: "Gentlemen. I will tell you an anecdote." Instantly the judge, the jury and the few spectators pricked up their ears and were all attention, as Murchison was admirable in that line, had a fund of better. But he soen proceeded to tell one of the dullest, prosiest and most pointless jokes possible. Everybody looked disappointed. The judge, leandon't see the point to that joke."
