Why Climbers of Mountains Suffer Dis-tress at a Certain Elevation. A French scientist has announced the result of experiments to determine the real cause of monetain clatered a climbers, and which may be said to correspond with sea sickness. It has recently been proposed to bore a tun-nel from the base to the summit of the Jungfrau, a distance of 12,000 feet, and to install therein a great passenger elevator, but warnings of the dreaded mountain sickness, which it is said would surely make the tourist repent his temerity, have brought the project to a standstill. Struck by the fact that mountain climbers are affected at an elevation of about 9,000 feet, while aeronauts can without trouble ascend to double that height, the scientist concluded that muscular fatigue has some thing to do with it. pigs, of whom one had to work a wheel while the other was at rest.
