A RARE INSTANCE.

One Policeman Who Was Capable of a Humane Act.

Policemen perform many unofficial acts which prove that the proverbial dony heart does not always beat under brass button. A pleasing instance is thus narrated by a writer in the Boston Saturday Gazette:

Saturday Gazette:
A poorly dressed and feeble old yoman was coming down one of the idestreets on the Back Bay, carefully alancing a basket on her head. Sudlenly a treacherous bit of ice, or an nequality in the pavement, caused her o miss her footing, and in striving to egain it the basket was thrown to the ground and its contents, a quantity of small wares, flew in every direction. Almost before she had time to re-dize the catastrophe, a policeman, who had been a spectator of the scene from the opposite corner, came hastening across the street, and with a word or two of condolence began deft-ly to collect the scattered spools, pieces of tape and thimbles. Several of the spools had rolled into the gutter and were rendered worthless by their contact with the mud, and my knight of the brass buttons noticed the rucial giance cast upon them by their owner. When the last of the articles had been restored to the basket, and he had assisted her to raise it to her head, he took a piece of silver from his pocket, slipped it into her hand, and, with a pleasant little nod in return for the voluminous blessings showered apon him, sauntered slowly back to his

Curious to know who had been thus carefully put away among the heaps of dead they broke into the plaster encasement and found the wonderful petrified head and bust above alluded to. About the head were two braids of golden hair, and across the Orleans money-makers. breast both hands had been carefully folded. The face is said to be one of great beauty, every feature exhibiting intelligence and culture. This wonderful petrifaction is now in the studio of Hasley Bauer, a well-known Strass-Peppermint Farms.

There are two places in the United States where the cultivation of the peppermint plant is one of the leading industries. The older of these places is in Wayne county, New York, but for a quarter of a century the business has been a well-known one in St. Joseph county, Michigan. In the latter place a farm of about four hundred acres is planted with the mint each year and alternated with clover to keep up the strength of the soil. The cultivation of the crop requires more than ordi-nary care. From the time the mint free from weeds, which are the bane of the peppermint-grower's existence. Two or three crops are gathered from each planting. The first and second crops are the best, and twenty pounds of oil to the acre is considered a good yield. The third crop is very apt to be weedy, and the yield only about ten pounds to the acre. A DESPOTIC HULER. The Stomach Not Easily Dethroned When Once It Obtains Mastery. One of the greatest misfortunes that appears above the ground it is con-stantly cultivated and hoed to keep it can happen to a man in his earthly career is to discover that he has a stomach. He may know it theoretically or recollect the lessons in physiology of his schoolboy days, but according to the San Francisco Chronicle, when he finds out by actual, personal experi-ence that he has a stomach he is to be pitied. The whole science of gastronomy-and it is a science—has been devised and perfected for the benefit of galaxy of gastronomists, all the culinary triumphs of the great restaurants in the capitals of the world, are due to "I might call upon the most persist-nt and obdurate of them and make out that they have stomachs, and that that organ, when once discovered, must be petted and flattered and soothed and kept in good humor to bousands and skip?"

There is no natural reason why a dinner, good or bad, should be enjoyed. The one object of eating is to satisfy hunger, and that being done, the dinner should be forgotten. It is only the imperious and arbitrary stomach which insists upon a further recognition of its claims, and it is only human weak-ness which submits to its demand. A modern philosopher, in terse though inelegant diction, has laid down this maxim, which is almost idiomatic: "You must down your stomach or your stomach will down you." There is more in this than will meet the eye of the casual reader. The stomach may as certain of the ancients believed, be the real seat of the emotions, passions and affections, but we make a great mistake if we subordinate the ego to a single organ, and especially to one which is only too ready to presume upon the favor shown it and the license given it. Healthy children know nothing about their stomachs, except that they ache sometimes if called on to do double duty, and there is nothing so healthy and happy in the world as a healthy child. If children of a larger growth could but ignore the gastric organ or forget it, dyspepsia would become a lost disease, and all the evils that follow in its train would disap-A DETECTIVE'S HINT. It May Be of Service to Owners of Valu-

HER HAIR FULL OF WEALTH.

"A young lady employed by a gold and silversmith in New York has only her good looks to thank for the fact that she was allowed to resign without being prosecuted for theft," remarked a resident of Brooklyn, according to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. "She has an extraordinarily fine head of hair, which she allows to hang 'oosely over her shoulders and nearly down to her waist. From time to time it was noticed that the gold used in the room in which she worked did not go as far as it ought in making jewelry and gem settings, and that even allowing for the filings, which are most carefully preserved, there was a distinct leak-

Steps were taken to subject the employes to a more rigid search, but no discovery was made until the young lady with the long hair quarreled with her roommate over a love affair, and in a fit of jealousy her rival gave away the most interesting story. The young lady had kept her hair well greased, and then while at work would fre-quently pass her fingers through it casually, as though it were a mere matter of habit.

"By the process she accumulated a good der! of gold dust in her hair and arly purloined treasure-trove and sold it without any difficulty. She broke down completely when taxed with the offense, made restitution as far as she was able, and her tears and promises were so profuse that she was then allowed to depart in peace, although her employersomewhat inconsistently took measures to prevent her obtaining further employment in the business in which she was an expert.'

LONDON AND PARIS BEGGARS

Professional Mendicants Have for Genera-tions Made a Good Living. The professional beggaris not a modern innovation, by any means, says the North American Review. A specimen case was "Scarecrow," the famous London beggar, who, having disabled himself in his right leg, asked alms all day in order to get a warm supper at night. According to John Timbs, the 'Rufflers," whom we often find mentioned in the literature of the seven-teenth century, were troops of idle vagrants who infested Lincoln's Inn Fields, London. They assumed the character of maimed soldiers who had suffered in the great rebellion and found a ready prey in the people of fashion and quality who drove by. Indeed, it is made clear by contemporary allusion in comedies that this square was the regular haunt of bogus cripthey carried on in the most barefaced and even intimidating manner. It is related that George IV., when prince of Wales, once attended a beggars' carnival in London, incognito. He had not been there very long when the chairman, addressing the company and pointing to the prince, said: "I call upon that 'ere gemman with a shirt for a song." The prince, as well as he could, got excused upon a friend who accompanied him promising to sing instead, which the latter did amid great dog is almost totally black, but the applicate. The Dispensary," supports an individual known as a "scriver," who carns a living by manufacturing the pathetic signboards which the sham cripples and the bogus blind men carry round their necks. In Paris, as is well known, the professional beggars hold regular weekly meetings at which the routes to be followed by the members of the guild are mapped out by a standing committee. They have an organ of their own called the Journal des Mendicants, which appears twice a week. From a recent issue the following curious advertisement is taken: "Wanted-To engage a cripple for a senside resort. Good references and a small deposit required." This queer announcement is explained by the fact that the proprietors of hotels and boarding-houses at fashionable French watering places assume that visitors would be disposed to give alms if an opportunity were afforded them, and, as they cannot very well do the begging themselves, they engage professional neggars, to whom they grant permission to solicit alms on their premises, and the beggars in return pay them one-half of their daily re-

She was one of the greatest frauds of the day, having succeeded in deluding her own sex in a most extraordinary manner, it being clearly proven at the trial that she had at different times and places married not less than fourteen other women of various ages.
