"TAKE CARE O' YERSELF." The Solicitous Injunction of the Sierra

In "Mountaineering in the Sierra Nevada" Clarence King relates that he came one night to a camp-fire under a group of pines. A little way from the lay a confused mass of old and half-bald buffalo robes and comforters, and outstretched on this was a family with their feet to the fire. The family consisted of mother and father, two small children and a huge girl. "You seem to have a pleasant camp spot here," was my salutation. The old woman answered sharply: "They's wus, and then again they's better.'

"Does well for our hogs," inserted the old man. "We've a band of pork that make out to find feed." "Oh! How many have you?" asked.

"Nigh three thousand." "Won't you set?" asked madam; then, turning to the daughter: "You, Susan, can't you try for to set up, and not spread so? Hain't you no manners, At this the massive girl got herself somewhat together, and made room for me, a courtesy which I declined, however. "Prospectin'?" inquired madam. "I say huntin'," suggested the man. "Maybe he's a cattle feller," inter-

"Goin' somewhere, ain't yer?" was Susan's guess. I gave a brief account of myself, satisfying all but the old woman, who evidently classified me as not up to her standard. Later she turned and said to

"I allow you've killed your coon in your day?" "No, ma'am," I said. "Now you speak of it, I realize that I never have killed a coon. I realized, too, that this fatal admission must forever lower me in her eves, and I observed that even Susan and her father were somewhat staggered. After a sojourn of several days among them, I took leave of the family. The father and Susan accompanied me for a distance into the forest to inspect the hogs. As we were parting the old man said with evident embarrassment: "You'll take care o' yerself, now, won't you?" I tried to convince him that I would.

Trephining. Prof. Victor Horsley, F. R. S., lately made some interesting assertions in an prehistoric people, though little better than savages of a low type, performed this delicate operation, and the proof of it to surgeons was convincing. If the wound in an injured scull healed the sharp edges become rounded, and if there was a kind of worm-saten ap-Horsley exhibited representations of prehistoric skulls which presented these appearances, and urged that it was sufficient proof that the owners survived these operations, performed something like five thousand years ago. He found that in one instance the hole had been scraped out of the skull, and mentioned that even at the present time among the Kabyles, in the north of Africa, two days were occupied in performing the operation. Trephining was also accomplished by drilling a number of holes with a bone drill, then breaking down the small partitions, and so releasing the desired piece of bone. Again, the operation could be effected with a stone saw, and skulls were represented that showed that after the periosteum had been scraped away sawing had been resorted to. Primitive people, he said, were very careless as to these operations, and even five hundred years ago in Germany a piece of the skull was removed as a cure for melancholy. If a savage suffered in the head from a blow trephining was accomplished, and doubtless the sufferer from fits, who was considered to be possessed, was relieved by a similar operation. From the skulls he had examined he found that the holes were generally made larks and escapades. The curfew immediately above those parts of the brain where an injury would induce fits. OF HUMAN KIND.

The True Story of a French Convict at into the operation as something very

No criminal is altogether hardened; springs of kindness and feeling for his special, and considered that the bone fellow-beings still exist within his nature, if one could but find them. The author of "Secrets of the Prison-House" tells a true story of a French convict at Toulon.

Among the free laborers, who work side by side with the prisoners, was an Itaiian who always treated them with great kindness, and became in consequence very much beloved. One day, however, the Italian seemed to be much depressed, and he confided to his fellow-laborers the fact that he was terbreach of manners. To place your ribly in want of money. Not many hand on the arm of a lady is a grave days after, one of the convicts escaped, sought the Italian out at his home, and said to him:

"Now I give myself up to you. My capture will bring you the reward of a hundred francs, and that will help you out of your difficulties."

For a long time the Italian refused to take advantage of the fugitive's self sacrifice, but at length he yielded and led back the prisoner.

The wife of a well-known journalist was roused one night, when she was alone in the house, by sounds which convinced her that burglars must be French. In Persia, among the aristocracy, a below. The courageous old lady rose and went downstairs into the diningshe addressed the burglar.

"I suppose you have been driven to these evil courses by want," she said; "but why add cowardly violence to your crime? You see I am an old woman-old enough to be your mother. Is your mother still alive? Do you remember her? What would you say or lo to a man who struck her in the face and knocked her down?"

Her words had a marked effect on the housebreaker. He was evidently moved to the heart. "I'm sorry, ma'am," he said, "and I'm ashamed of what I'm doing. I won't take anything belonging to you except this five-pound note. But 1 really am in desperate straits, and I want money badly."

He emptied his pockets of the silver he had taken, but with the full consent of the old lady made off with the that it cannot be overcome by a weaker five pounds. Some time afterward an envelope reached her, addressed in a strange hand, and in it was a fivepound note.

They are telling a story of a Dutchman who presented himself at the registar's office recently to obtain a license for his approaching marriage, and who, on being asked the name of the bride, was compelled to confess that it had quite escaped him, and he had to return home for the necessary information. It's a pretty good story of absence of mind, but there are others on record that are even better. There have been cases where persons have even forgotten their own names. Lessing, the historian, was subject to the most wonderful fits of abstraction. One night, returning home late, he rang the front door bell, and when a servant called out from an upper window that the professor was not at home, he said: "All right, I'll come again," and walked away.

There was an English clergyman, Rev. George Harvest, who was engaged to a daughter of the bishop of London, but on the day of his wedding went fishing, and forgetful of the appointed hour did not appear at the nuptials. The lady broke off the match.
